"One of the physicians who attended Mr. Potter here was interviewed last evening. He stated that Mr. Potter's inability to converse had for some time served to baffle the physicians in their efforts to determine the root of his illness. It seems, however, that Mr. Potter, some two years ago, suffered a slight attack of kidney disease. Unwise dependence upon a robust constitution and naturally perfect health, and neglect of proper clothing, doubtless sowed the seeds of a disease that needed but some such personal neglect as that of Tuesday morning to develop. From the symptoms at first shown, it was thought that his only trouble was nervous prostration; but his long continuance in a semi unconscious state led to the belief that his illness was seated in a chronic difficulty more mysterious and dangerous."

Up to the latter part of last year Mr. Edward F. Rook, a member of the New York stock exchange, was doing business in Wall street, New York. He had everything to encourage him, and make life happy, but was the victim of unaccountable uneasiness. His experience as described by one who knew, was as follows: "At unexpected times, and on occasions when he had the greatest reason to feel joyous he was irritable and haunted with strange feelings of discontent. He endeavored to check these feelings and appear pleasant, but it required a great effort to do so; after which he would again relapse into his former morbid mood. This feeling continued for a number of months, when he became conscious of an added sensation of lassitude. He was tired even when resting, and although experiencing no acute pain, had dull, aching sensations in his limbs and various parts of his body. Shortly afterward his head began to ache most frequently and his stomach failed to digest properly. Being told that he was suffering from malaria he consulted an eminent physician, who informed him that his kidneys were slightly affected, and gave him medicine to restore them. But he grew worse instead of better. He then consulted other eminent doctors of another school and was informed that he had a brain difficulty somewhat in the nature of a tumor, but in spite of all efforts to the contrary he grew worse. At this time his condition was terrible. What at first were simple symptoms had developed to terrible troubles. He was flushed and feverish, constantly uneasy, and yet always weary. He had an intense appetite one day and very little the next. His pulse was irregular, his breathing labored, and every moment of existence a burden. These disastrous symptoms continued, his face and body became discolored, his heart was irregular in its action, and his breath came in short, convulsive gasps. He grew constantly worse, notwithstanding the utmost precautions of his friends and finally died in the greatest agony. After his death an examination as to its actual cause was made, when his brain was found to be in a perfect condition, and the reason of his decease was of an entirely different nature."

The experiences which have been cited above all had a common cause and were each the result of one disease. That disease, which so deceitfully, yet surely removed the people above mentioned was Bright's disease of the kidneys. In the case of Mr. Rook the examination after death, while showing the brain to be in perfect condition, revealed the terrible fact that he was the victim of a slight kidney trouble, which had gone on unchecked, until it resulted in acute Bright's disease. The leading physicians and scientists of the world are learning that more than one-half the deaths which occur are caused by this monstrous scourge. It is one of the most deceitful maladies ever known to the human race. It manifests itself by symptoms so slight and common, as to seem unworthy of attention; and yet these very insignificant symptoms are the first stages of the worst complaint known in the history of the world. Thousands of people have died from troubles that are called heart disease, apoplexy, pneumonia, brain fever, and similar diseases, when it was, in fact Bright's disease of the kidneys. The ravages of this disease have been greatly increased from the fact that until recent years no way was known to prevent its beginning nor check its increase when it had become once fixed upon the system. Within the past two years, however, we have learned of more than four hundred pronounced cases of Bright's disease, many of them much worse than those above described, and most of whom had been given up by prominent physicians, who have been completely cured. The means used to accomplish this end has been Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, manufactured in Rochester, N. Y., a remedy that has won its way into the confidence of the public solely upon the remarkable merits it possesses. As a result, it is more widely used and thoroughly praised than any medicine which has ever been before the American public. Indeed there is not a drug store in the entire land where it cannot be found.

Although Bright's disease is so common in cities, it is still more prevalent in the country. When eminent physicians in the largest cities are not able to recognize Bright's disease, it is only natural that in the country, where there are few physicians of any kind, and those few so unacquainted with the disease as to call it by some other name, it should rage terribly and yet unknown to the ones who are suffering with it. Thousands of people can look back and recall the death of friends from what was supposed to be some common complaint, when it was really Bright's disease, and no one knew it. The terrible pleuro-pneumonia, which has been so dreaded, is usually the result of uremic or kidney poison. Lung fever can be traced to a similar source. Most cases of paralysis arise from the same difficulty, as well as innumerable fevers, lung, throat, head and bowel troubles. A vast number of ladies have suffered and died from complaints common to their sex, called, perhaps, general debility, when could the real cause have been known, it would have been found to be Bright's disease, masquerading under another name. In marked contrast to the sad cases which have been above described are the experiences of many prominent people who were as low as any of the persons mentioned, but who were remarkably restored to former health and vigor by this same remedy. Among this number are the following prominent names: Col. John C. Whitner, Atlanta, Ga.; B. F. Larrabee, Boston, Mass.; Gen. C. A. Heckman, Phillipsburg, N. J.; Rev. D. B. Buck, D. D., Geneva, N. Y.; Dr. F. A. McManus, Baltimore, Md.; Edwin Fay, Davenport, Iowa; Rev. A. C. Kendrick, LL. D, Rochester, N. Y.; J. S. Matthews, Portland, Mich.; C. W. Eastwood, New York; Dr. A. Ramsay, Albia, Iowa; Chancellor C. N. Sims, D. D., Syracuse, N. Y.; Dr. S P. Jones, Marienette, Wis.; T. S. Ingraham, Cleveland, O.; Henry T. Champney, Boston, Mass.; Elder James S. Prescott, North Union, O., who is a prominent member of the Shaker community, and many others.

To all candid minds the force of the above facts must come with special power. They show the importance of promptness and attention to the first symptoms of disordered health before disease becomes fixed and hope departs. They show how this can successfully be done, and that the dangers which await neglect can only with difficulty be removed.

Miss Parloa says that the American people all cook too rapidly; that the toughest meat may be made tender by slow cooking. Still, leather beefsteak in boarding houses will always remain leathery, no matter how it is cooked.

Baby's Things.

Hide the little boots away,
Boots wherein your darling's feet
Pattered through the busy day,
Making all your life complete.
But the feet are still to-day—
Hide the little boots away.

Hide the little cap from sight,
There are now no baby eyes
Gladdened by its tassel bright,
Laughing out in gay surprise.
Dear, sweet eyes are closed for aye—
Put the little cap away.

Hide the dainty coat from sight,
For he'll scarcely need it now,
With his dimpled arms so white,
And this silence o'er his brow—
Little empty coat of gray,
Put it with the cap away.

Hide the precious form from sight,
With these other useless things;
Lay it 'neath the blossoms white,
For he's won his cherub wings;
And the feet shall never stray,
That are so white and still to-day.

HOW SHE FETCHED HIM.

Hazel Quirk looked quickly up at Lord Traverse Bay, the love light beaming forth from her eyes with a tender radiance that told more plainly than could any words the deep affection she bore him; but there was in the look a pleading wistfulness, a sense of trustful security, that touched his very heart. She did not speak, but, placing a dimpled arm around his neck, drew his face down and kissed him with a soft, melting, three-for-fifty cents kiss that she kept on tap only for him, and then her eyes shone forth again the love that her lips could not utter, while the drooping mouth quivered as if in pain.

'You are not well, darling,' said Percy Hanafin, (his week-day name) in agonized tones, the words nearly choking him as he spoke. 'Let me bring your vinaigrette, or a bottle of seltzer—a quaff or two of that would revive you.'

But Hazel only laid her head on his shoulder, wound her white arms around his neck, and began to sob as if her heart would break.

'My God, Hazel! what have I done to cause you this anguish? Speak, my angel; speak, and tell me wherein the fault lies. Demand of me any sacrifice, no matter how great, and it shall be cheerfully made. I have a large red apple in my overcoat pocket, and it shall be yours—all yours—if you will only speak.'

Slowly from the shoulder blade rose the little head, with its mass of brown curls; slowly turned the pure, beautiful face of Hazel Quirk, until Percy again looked down into those eyes that had so lately beamed forth merry glances, and saw once more the little nose that had so often burrowed in his vest. 'You will surely keep your promise?' Hazel asked between the convulsive sobs that seemed to be breaking her heart and seriously disarranging her liver.

'Of course I will, my love,' replied Percy. 'You shall have the apple.'

'And is it a really and truly red one?' asked the girl, again sobbing as if her heart would break.

'Yes, my love.'

'Hope to die if it ain't?'—this between the sobs.

'Yes,' said Percy.

'Criss-cross?'

'Yes, dear.'

'Well,'—and here she broke down afresh, but finally mastered her grief and spoke—'Papa has soaked the mill.'

'What!' exclaimed Percy in tones of astonishment, 'soaked the mill that has been his home so long?'

'Same mill,' replied Hazel, wringing out her handkerchief and fishing up a dry one from the sleeping car of her polonaise.

'Well, that is sad indeed,' said Percy; 'but what matters it to us?'

'Ah! you do not understand,' sobbed the girl; 'you do not drop.'

'Why, what do you mean, Hazel? You have concealed something from me; else why this juggling with words?'

'I mean, Percy,' said Hazel in low, bitter tones, 'that the mill is mortgaged, and that I am to pay the debt.'

'What! my Hazel collateral security? It cannot, must not be!'

'But it is,' was the tearful response.

'I care not,' exclaimed the young man. 'You shall not be sacrificed. I will marry you to-morrow, and thwart this vile plan of Jim Rodney's.'

'You will?' said the girl, looking at him eagerly, and jumping lightly from his knee.

'I will.'

The little head fell on his shirt front with a dull thud.

Hazel had fainted.

Placing her carefully on a fauteuil, Lord Traverse Bay kissed the tear-stained cheeks and started out to borrow a dollar and a half from his mother with which to get the marriage license. As the sound of his footsteps died away, Dustan Quirk entered the room where Hazel was lying. She rose as he opened the door, and smiled faintly.

'Did you give the racket, his?' the old man asked.

'Yes, papa.'

'And did he fall into the net?'

'I should smile,' replied Hazel.

'Suckers are pretty thick this winter, my child,' said Dustan Quirk, 'and you're the girl that can land them.'—Chicago Tribune.

A PLEASANT LETTER.

IT RINGS OF A GRATEFUL HEART AND GIVES HONOR WHERE HONOR IS DUE.

Mr. William W. Chadwick, of Hatchville, Conn., writes under date of June 14, 1880, to Dr. Kennedy, to say that the use of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" has cured him of Gall Stone, from which he had experienced anything but comfort for a long time. Mr. Chadwick felt wholly cured when he wrote, and says: "I have had no pain for six months, and have also regained my flesh and can stand a fair day's work. I recommend 'Keunedy's Favorite Remedy' to any one suffering from a deranged liver." Grateful patients are common. Dr. Kennedy is daily in receipt of letters from them, expressing similar sentiments. These letters are spontaneous and put in all varieties of phraseology, but invariably setting forth one thing—the value of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for many forms of disease. It may be just the thing you have been looking for. Is your liver disordered? Have you derangement of the kidneys or bladder, associated with constipation of the bowels? If so, you want "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy." Dr. Kennedy practices medicine and surgery in all their branches. Write and state your case frankly. Letters promptly answered. A SPRING DEFENCE

HOW TO REPEL THE ASSAULTS OF ILL HEALTH—DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" MEANS SOMETHING FOR YOU.

The months of March, April and May are the three successive arches of a bridge which connect the season of ice and sleet with that of leaves and roses. No less in respect of health than of outward natural phenomenon is this true. Spring is a trying season for invalids, and particularly for those who either suffer, or are liable to suffer, from Biliousness, Kidney Complaints and Constipation of the Bowels, and for women who are chronically subject to any of the long catalogue of physical ailments to which their delicate sex is heir. Indications of disease in Spring should be heeded at once. A fatal attack may easily result from neglect or a disordered condition of the bowels. The ounce of prevention may be had where tons of cure—or attempted cure—may be unavailing. Are you vexed or troubled in Spring with indigestion, torpid liver, want of appetite, constipation, or a feverish state of the skin? If so, take without an hour's unnecessary delay, Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." No medicine is so harmless and yet so quick and positive in its action. It is Nature's own idea, condensed and made tangible by human skill. Do not leave home when going upon a journey without a bottle in your valise. You cannot possibly put one dollar in any other shape where it can render you so essential service. The "Favorite Remedy" is almost instantaneous in its action, but does not tear you to pieces with its violence nor nauseate you with disgust. It frees the liver from bile and sets the machinery of your body into normal and healthy operation. Remember: Dr. D. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. Ask your druggist for it and take nothing else. Price One Dollar a bottle. 4w2

NATURE.

As a fond mother, when the day is o'er,
Leads by the hand her little child to bed,
Half-willing, half-reluctant to be led,
And leaves his broken playthings on the floor,
Still gazing at them through the open door,
Nor wholly reassured and comforted
By promise of others in their stead,
Which, though more splendid, may not please him more;
So Nature deals with us, and takes away
Our playthings, one by one, and by the hand
Leads us to rest so gently, that we go,
Scarce knowing if we wish to go or stay,
Being too full of sleep to understand
How far the unknown transcends the what we know.

Dead he lay among his books,
The peace of God was in his looks.
As the statues in the gloom
Watch o'er Maximilian's tomb,
So these volumes from their shelves,
Watch him silent as themselves.
Ah! his hand will nevermore
Turn their storied pages o'er!
Nevermore his lips repeat
Songs of theirs, however sweet!
Let the lifeless body rest,
He is gone who was its guest;
Gone as travelers haste to leave
An inn, nor tarry until eve.
Traveler, in what realms afar,
In what planet, in what star,
In what vast aerial space
Shines the light upon thy face?
In what gardens of delight
Rest they weary feet to-night?

"OUT OF THE COMMON."

The sun-light danced in at the window, and turned her hair to shining gold; touched the crisp, gray locks of John Rogers, and made a friendly circle of light and warmth about the pair.

"I could not go against mamma's wishes, you know," the young lady said, gently, playing with the ring on her left hand. "She has had a long talk with me this morning, and though I knew she disapproved of our engagement, I never realized before how her heart was set against it."

"And you do not think by patient waiting—by proving how earnest we are—"

"No, John; mother cannot look on it as we do; she realizes all the disadvantages and none of the hopes that we have built on; and then—" the young lady glanced down once at her delicate hands before she continued—"would it be quite fair, John, for me to wait, and let all other opportunities glide by, and grow old and sad while I waited?"

John started. There was so much caution suggested in the words. No doubt she was but repeating them after her mother, but they fell chillingly on his ears from those young lips.

"It is true, Maud," he answered, with a look of pain on his face. "You shall not let other chances of happiness slip by because you are bound to me. It is not the love I thought you gave me—a love which trusts and hopes in patient faithfulness. I am no longer young, dear, but I have risked much on this dream of love, coming late in life, but coming for the first time, Maud, and—" his voice broke—"staying with me—always."

He rose and turned partly away from her, quite still, leaning his arms on the mantelpiece. Maud Branson rose, too, and came toward him, her delicate, beautiful face full of concern. There was nothing about John Rogers to attract notice. He was a very plain man, no longer young; but he had at least some charm of mind or soul which had won the love of a very beautiful woman. Her dress clung in graceful folds to her slender figure, a fillet of blue bound the golden hair, which was coiled in classic simplicity about her head. He turned and looked at her, taking in all the details of the picture; then he put his head down dejectedly on his crossed arms.

Maud extended one hand appealingly.

"John, you will take it?"

"Yes, Maud," he answered, drawing his breath hard. "I will take it—and renounce it." He patted the soft surface once or twice thoughtfully. "All that came with it, and all that goes with it. Maud, good-by."

There was such a noble sadness in his face that it touched her. The proud head bent lower, until it rested on John Rogers' shoulder. She raised herself with eyes still wet.

"Good-by, John. The world can't give just what we want."

"No, dear. What is it?"

"Your ring."

He took the pretty sapphire ring he had placed on her hand one day, with only half-realized rapture, and slipped it in his vest pocket. It was worthless now.

And so John Rogers left the house and threaded his way down through the busy streets. The sunlight still danced over him, warm and beautiful, kissing his grave face, his hair, his hands.

"And let other opportunities glide by;" he repeated the words to himself ruefully. "It's not the old fashioned love; not the love I used to dream of when I was a boy. Perhaps there isn't any better nowadays."

He looked very tired as he ran up the steps and rang at the door of his boarding-house. Clarice noticed it, his landlady's daughter.

"You look tired, Mr. Rogers," looking up from her work and speaking through the open door.

He smiled wearily.

"Do I? And what are you doing, Clarice? Still sewing for those hardened little wretches?"

"Yes; isn't this a big hole I am darning? Boys do wear out their clothes so fast. You are home early from the office."

"Yes; I had an engagement at three, and did not care to go back. May I come in and have a chat with you?"

"Oh, yes, if you care to," with her quick smile, a smile which her eyes belied, and which always seemed to John "made to order." She pulled forward a chair without rising, and went on with her darning again. "I sit in here because it's cool, and I always do my sewing afternoons; in the mornings there is housework."

It was a shabby little parlor, seldom used by the boarders, who were principally gentlemen, and spent their evenings out, if not in their own rooms. A few tawdry decorations only enhanced the shabbiness of the threadbare carpet, dirty walls and ancient lace curtains.

"Do you never have any amusements, Clarice?" asked John, trying to forget his own wretchedness by interesting himself in some one else.

"Amusements?" she repeated, pushing the curls off her forehead in a puzzled way. "Oh, yes; there is a Mr. Jones; he plays the piano; and once Mr. Aikens, the elocution teacher, read a piece, and all the boarders came in."

John smiled, eyeing the little maiden pityingly as she stitched away. She looked up suddenly and caught his eye.

"We did not always keep boarders," she said, proudly, reading something there she did not like. "When I was at school, we were well off and had a nice house; but mamma is a widow with eight children, you know, and I have to help her about the work."

"I know," said John, kindly, looking at little Clarice with so much sympathy that she was quite warmed toward him, and continued confidentially:

"Once I had a beautiful time—that was a good while ago—a girl I knew at school hunted me up, wrote to me and invited me to visit her. It was in Philadelphia."

"And did you go?"

"Ah, yes; and it was a beautiful time!" Then, her face falling, "but I had to come home. It was all over in three months."

"Ah, that was hard," sympathetically.

"Yes, it was, Mr. Rogers," taking up another jacket, and beginning a new hole. "For they were rich, you know, and it was quite like old times—their nice house and all—and then to come back here—the noise and the children, and clearing up the rooms—it was worse after that. But perhaps I shouldn't have minded if it hadn't been for—there was something worse than all that," continued Clarice, working hard at the jacket with crimson cheeks.

"Will you tell me about it?" asked John Rogers, very kindly, his honest gray eyes softening. "It does one good somtimes to tell one's troubles, and I am so much older than you."

Clarice looked up, quite gratified at this unexpected sympathy.

"I will tell you, Mr. Rogers. It was when I was in Philadelphia that I met Harris—Harris Bell—and I was—so different there, at the parties I went to with Fannie, that he thought I was pretty, and he told me so, and said that he loved me, and wanted me to be his wife. I had a pretty white dress, you know," timidly, and glancing blushingly down at her present faded calico, "and wore flowers—and—you can scarcely understand it."

"Yes, I can understand it," said John, noting the light in the brown eyes and the newly acquired color. "Tell me the rest, Clarice."

"And we were engaged—and I could scarcely believe it—but I was very happy. He was such a handsome gentleman, too, and so aristocratic, and I did not mind the boarders, or anything, when I thought about Harris. So at last he came here to see me; and he saw mamma and the children, the house and the boarders, and I can't tell you how it was, but he was different. He didn't tell me he had changed, but he was restless, and it worried him, and I saw he cared. I am proud, Mr. Rogers, though we are poor now, and I broke it all up. It wasn't the love I had dreamed of. I had read a great many novels, and I thought life was a fairy tale and love was beautiful. I always used to think, 'when some one comes to love me I'll never be sad or vexed any more;' and Harris seemed to me all I had wished for until I saw the house and the boarders fretted him. For I had dreamed of a love that would be out of the common, and that when I went away with my lover I thought I, too, would be better, just as he wished me to be. So I told him, Mr. Rogers, it was all over, and he said perhaps we were not fitted to make each other happy. And then he went away, and the work and the noise and the boarders fretted me as they had never done before. For somehow, although I could not love him as much for treating me so, the thoughts about him and the dreams about him were all gone—and I missed them so."

"Poor child!" said John, tenderly.

"But it's all my own fault, Mr. Rogers. I expected too much. There is no such love as I have dreamed about, and mother says I did very wrong to break it off. She was very angry with me; but I knew these things would always fret him, and I could not bear it."

"Clarice, would it help you any to know that I, too, have suffered as you have suffered?" asked John, for two shining tears had dropped on the boy's jacket. "I, too, dreamed of love, and found a woman whom I believed had given me that love; but because her parents found in me only a plain, poor man no longer young, she gave me up. She gave up faith and trust and hope because she had not that real love which you describe."

He stopped speaking; he had forgotten the little girl in her calico gown, and was gazing abstractedly out of the window, hard lines of regret and passionate despair written on his face.

Suddenly he felt a little, warm, soft hand laid gently on his, and Clarice said:

"Mr. Rogers, I am so sorry."

He wrung the little working hand, and then he rose and went to his room and gave way to his new sorrow.

Clarice folded her sewing and put it away; but it comforted her as she went about her evening duties that Mr. Rogers had listened to her story, and to know that he, too, had missed the love he had dreamed of.

CHAPTER II.

Several months had passed away. John Rogers had often found his way into the shabby little parlor and chatted with Clarice. Once he had found a bunch of flowers on his bureau, and no room in the house was such a model of order.

One day, as he sauntered into the parlor toward dusk, hoping that his little friend would come there with her basket of mending and sit a while, he heard the rustle of feminine garments, and looking up saw that his landlady stood before him. Mrs. Dean was a woman who prided herself greatly on her former dignity. She wore a very long and dusty alpaca. It being no longer within her limits to trail silk, she trailed alpaca. Some persons are of this mold. Her hands which she folded majestically were very grimy. Rogers remembered with pleasure that Clarice was always neat.

"Mr. Rogers," began the lady with unusual dignity, "pray be seated. I have noticed for some time past that you have frequently, of evenings, found your way into my parlor, and passed the time in conversation with my daughter Clarice. I should not speak of this circumstance had not events which have already come to pass taught me to be guarded. Clarice is no longer a child, she is a woman, with all a woman's readiness to love pathetically. You, though not a young man, are a bachelor, and I ask you as a mother to spare my daughter's feelings. As I said before, I should not have spoken of this had not a circumstance which transpired this morning led me to believe it was my duiy, my most urgent duty. My daughter is in the habit of assisting with the housework, in cleaning and putting in order the rooms of my gentlemen boarders. This morning I entered your room, expecting to find Clarice dusting—dusting with all the light-heartedness inspired by a well-fulfilled duty," continued Mrs. Dean, waxing eloquent. "Imagine my consternation when I found her kneeling by the bedside, her face pressed against the pillows, in tears. She sprang up and tried to hide her agitation, but—Mr. Rogers, I am a widow with eight children, and a large house full of boarders. I cannot have you trifle with the feelings of my daughter. If you are not in earnest, you must desist." And the lady applied a handkerchief to her eyes.

It is said by some people that poverty is degrading. It had certainly proved so with Mrs. Dean.

"Madam," said John Rogers, with dignity, rising and laying his hand on the chair, "if I had not already learned to love your daughter, this tale might work upon my sympathies and appeal to my honor, but it could never make words of love pass from my lips that my heart could not echo. I cannot applaud your course in revealing your daughter's emotion, and which she would no doubt bitterly regret. I love Clarice; she stole into my heart when it was sore and bleeding; and if I have awakened any response I am happier and more honored than I had believed."

He bowed with the gentle courtesy which John Rogers always used toward women, and passed out of the room, leaving Mrs. Dean very much relieved, but somewhat humiliated.

John entered his room and shut the door. He struck a light and turned on the gas, pulled down the shade and stood irresolute. Like one in a dream he went to the bedside and laid his hand against the pillow. It was slightly damp. He sank down in a chair and covered his face with his hands. For a long time he sat there motionless; then he arose, took out his evening newspaper, and lit his cigar as usual.

* * * * *

It was a calm June afternoon.

"John," said Clarice, touching his arm with a certain timidity she had never quite outgrown, "life is a fairy tale, and love is beautiful, only it comes in a different way."

"And this is the love we have dreamed of." And John Rogers looked into the dewy brown eyes of the little girl in the calico gown, and putting his arm around her waist pressed her close to his heart.

And the sunlight danced in at the window and touched the sweet lips learning to smile with heart content, and the grave, fond face of John Rogers. And it folded them in its embrace, warm and beautiful, bright and golden, and it glorified even the shabby little boarding-house parlor, and lifted it "out of the common."

THE EXACT TRUTH.

Two young masons were building a brick wall—the front wall of a high house. One of them, in placing a brick, discovered that it was a little thicker on one side than the other.

'It will make your wall untrue, Ben,' the other said.

'Pooh?' answered Ben; 'what difference will such a trifle as that make? You're too particular.'

'My mother,' replied he, 'taught me that 'truth is truth;' and ever so little an untruth a lie, and a lie is no trifle.'

'Oh,' said Ben, 'that's all very well; but I am not lying, and have no intention of lying.'

'Very true, but you make your wall tell a lie, and I have read that a lie in one's work is a lie in his character—it will show itself sooner or later, and bring harm if not ruin.'

'I'll risk it in this case,' answered Ben; and he worked away, laying more, carrying the wall up higher, till the close of day, when they quit work and went home.

The next morning they went to resume their work, when, behold, the lie had wrought out the result of all lies. The brick wall, getting a little slant from the untrue brick, had got more and more untrue as it got higher, and at last, in the night, had toppled over.

Just so with ever so little an untruth in your character; it grows more and more untrue if you permit it to remain, till it brings ruin. Tell, act and live the exact truth always.

A POSSIBLE MISTRESS OF THE WHITE HOUSE.

Mrs. Craig W. Wadsworth, who is now spoken of as the possible future mistress of the White House as President Arthur's wife, is the daughter of Francis Peters of Philadelphia, and spent much of her time before marriage abroad. At Paris and London she was the reigning belle of society, as she always was at Philadelphia. The Peters family resided on Girard street some years ago, Their receptions were of the most magnificent decription, and there was a perfect scramble among the faint hearted swains to be invited, so as to have the opportunity of escorting Miss Lena to supper. At last she was captured by Craig Wadsworth, son of Gen. James Wadsworth, of New York, a revolutionary descendant, like herself. Her husband lived but a few years, and left as her inheritance two bright boys, James and Craig. For several winters Mrs. Wadsworth has resided in Washington, and it is her fortune to be among the few who are invited to the private breakfasts and dinners of the President.

SPEAK GENTLY.—A young lady went out for a walk but forgot to take her purse with her. Presently she met a little girl with a basket on her arm. 'Please, miss, will you buy something from my basket?' said the girl, showing a variety of book-marks, watch-cases, needle books, etc. 'I am sorry I can't buy anything to-day,' said the young lady. 'I haven't any money with me. Your things look very pretty.' She stopped a moment and spoke a few kind words to the girl, and then as she passed, she said again, 'I am very sorry I can't buy anything from you to-day.' 'O, miss,' said the little girl, 'you've done me just as much good as if you had. Most persons that I meet say 'Get away with you!' But you have spoken kindly to me and I feel a heap better.' That was 'considering the poor.' How little it costs to speak kind words, and how much they are worth. If we have nothing else to give let us at least give love and sympathy.

A lady put her watch under her pillow the other night, but couldn't keep it there because it disturbed her sleep. And there, all the time, was her bed ticking right underneath her, and she never thought of that at all.

Charles Lamb, when a boy, while walking with his sister in a churchyard and reading the epitaphs, said to her, 'Mary, where are all the naughty persons buried?'

The School-Boy.

We bought him a box for his books and things,
And a cricket bag for his bat;
And he looked the brightest and best of kings
Under his new straw hat.

We handed him into a railway train
With a troop of his young compeers,
And we made as though it were dust and rain
Were filling our eyes with tears.

We looked in his innocent face to see
The sign of a sorrowful heart;
But he only shouldered his bat with glee
And wondered when they would start.

'Twas not that he loved not as heretofore,
For the boy was tender and kind;
But his was a world that was all before,
And ours was a world behind.

'Twas not his fluttering heart was cold,
For the child was loyal and true;
And the parents love the love that is old,
And the children the love that is new.

And we come to know that love is a flower
Which only groweth down;
And we scarcely spoke for the space of an hour
As we drove back through the town.

MAY BE SO.

After looking over the battle field of Chancellorsville I went back to the brick house for dinner. During my absence a little red headed man had arrived and he was introduced by the woman as her brother-in-law. As soon as I came in he began on me:

"Vhas you under Shineral Shackson in dis fight?"

"No."

"I tole you dot vhas an awful fight, my friendt. Blood poured out shust like it vhas raining. Maybe you vhas under Shineral Lee, up near de plank road?"

"No I wasn't."

"Not under Lee? But I tole yer dot Shineral Lee vhas an awful fighter. Maybe you vhas mit Early up at Fredericksburg?"

"No."

"So? Vhell, dot Early he vhas a sphlendid sheneral, und he like to fight all der time. I feels sure you vhas mit Early. Maybe you vhas mit Hooker."

"No."

"Not mit Hooker! Den you vhas mit Sedgwick up der roadtz."

"No."

"Vhell, by golly! Not mit Shackson nor Lee—not mit Hooker nor Sedgwick! Vhell, vhell! Dot beats all oafer."

Both of us fell to and began eating, and nothing further was said until the meal was finished and we had gone out to look at some old cannon wheels in the yard. Then my friend put his hand on my shoulder, lowered his voice and said:

"My friendt, if you vhas not mit Lee nor Shackson nor Hooker in dis fight, maybe you and me vhas in der same place?"

"Maybe so. Where were you?"

"In Canada!" he whispered.

He called "goot-bye" after me as I rode away, but I wouldn't have answered him for a hundred dollars.—M. Quad.

WHAT GRAPES TO RAISE.

The Country Gentleman gives the relative value, quality and character of the more common and newer varieties of grape under the following heads:

Early grapes—Moore's Hartford, Lady, Early Dawn, Adirondack, Worden, Massasoit, Telegraph.

Hardy half-bloods—Croton, Burnet, Early Dawn, Senasqua, Salem, Wilder, and the other Rogers hybrids.

High quality and character, with a slight intermixture of exotic blood—Lady Washington, Brighton, Duchess.

Of fine quality, but poor growth—Eumelan, Rebecca, Walter, Adirondack.

Hardy and high flavor, but poor bunch—Creveling.

Nearly perfect, but not quite good enough—Concord.

Prominent and promising white grapes—Prentiss, Niagara, Dutchess, Pocklington. Red or darker—Jefferson, Vergennes.

Half-blood, tender, high quality—Allen's Hybrid.

Faultless, but rather small—Delaware.

Hardy and productive, but not good enough—Hartford, Martha.

Excellent, but irregular in ripening—Diana.

Good winter keepers—Diana, Catawba, Isabella and the late-ripening Rogers hybrids.

Grapes of high value or of high promise—Lady Washington, Niagara, Dutchess, Brighton, Rochester, Prentiss, Jefferson.

Of little value—Blood's Black, Janesville, Champion, Charter Oak, Dracut Amber.

It is customary, in some localities, to teach children to think of a text as they drop their pieces of money into the contribution box. A certain little girl at Sunday school, recently, saw the box approaching, and began to search in her memory for a text. She hesitated for a few moments, dropped the dime in the box, and exclaimed, triumphantly: "A fool and his money are soon parted."—Bath Times.

Her mistake: "Why do you suppose Rev. Johnson Reed is always driving over to Smithville?" asked one Austin gentleman of another. "His wife says he goes over to admire the beauty of the place," was the reply. "Yes, but does his wife know the beauty of the place is a young widow?"—Texas Siftings.

A smooth sea never made a skillful mariner, neither do uninterrupted prosperity and success qualify for usefulness and happiness. The storms of adversity, like the storms of the ocean, arouse the faculties and excite the invention, prudence, skill and fortitude of the voyagers.

Many a true heart that would have come back like the dove to the ark, after the first transgression, has been frightened beyond recall by the angry look and menacing taunt—the savage charity of an unforgiving soul.

A very modest young lady who was a passenger on board a packet ship, it is said, sprang out of her berth and jumped overboard on hearing the captain, during a storm, order the mate to haul down the sheets.

A small boy, who was playing truant the other day, when asked if he wouldn't get a whipping when he got home, replied: "What is five minutes' licking to five hours of fun?"

What word is there of five letters that, after taking two away, will still have six? Sixty.

OUR FORESTS.

In our own country we have gone to the forests in a kind of freebooter style, cutting, and burning more than we could cut, acting for the most part as though all the while in a frolic or a fight, until now at length, after a century or two of this sort of work, we are waking up to the facts that our once boundless woods are disappearing, and that we are likely to suffer no little loss thereby. But it is only the few who seem now to have any adequate sense of our condition as affected by the threatened loss of the trees. In a recent publication, issued by authority of one of our Western States for the express purpose of attracting settlers from European countries, the statistics of its great lumber production are elaborately set forth, accompanied by the assurance that the present enormous consumption of trees for this purpose may be continued ten or fifteen years longer before the forests will be destroyed. The cool unconcern in regard to the future shown in this is very noticeable. "After us, the deluge." A corresponding feeling, though working on a much smaller scale, is seen in an advertisement, and of a class often appearing in our older States. "Brace up, Young Man. You have lived on your parents long enough. Buy this farm, cut off the wood, haul it to market, get your money for it, and pay for the farm.....The owner estimates that there will be 500 cords of market wood." And so, all over the country, on the large scale and on the small, the axe is laid at the roots of the trees, and our forests are disappearing. It is estimated that 8,000,000 acres of forest land are cleared every year, and that in the ten years previous to 1876, 12,000,000 acres were burned over simply to clear the land.

The very necessities of their situation have aroused the people of some of our Western States to action. In Kansas, Nebraska, and other States liberal premiums have been offered for the encouragement of tree planting, and already in many portions of the prairie region a perceptible change has taken place, and the eye no longer wanders over great spaces without sight of shrub or tree. Minnesota has her Forestry Association, and its secretary reports that between seven and ten millions of trees were planted in that State during the year 1877, of which more than half a million were planted in a single day, "Arbor Day," as it is called, or tree-planting day, the first Tuesday of May having been fixed upon as the day, and every owner of land invited to devote the day especially to the planting of trees. Similar efforts have been made in other States which are similarly situated in respect to a supply of forest. The great railway companies, whose roads stretch across the treeless prairies, have become in some instances large planters of trees, feeling the need of them both as screens from the fierce storms that sweep down from the Rocky Mountains, and as a source of supply for the ties which are constantly needing renewal.

Tree-planters' manuals are published and distributed freely, with a view to aid those who would plant by giving them the experience already obtained in regard to the most profitable trees to plant and the best methods of planting. Thus in some places there is already quite a movement in the right direction. In the reports of planting the figures make an imposing aggregate. But a discount needs to be made for the probable failure of a large percentage of the trees planted. And even with the most generous estimate in regard to the work of planting, what is accomplished as yet is but a fraction of what needs to be done. It is but the feeble beginning of a vast work. The talk is of millions of trees planted. This sounds well. But a good many trees can stand upon an acre, and the latest estimates put the annual decrease of our forest area at seven million acres. So that Minnesota, with all her ardor in this work, has only planted one tree for every acre of trees destroyed. An area equal to that of the State of Maryland is every year swept clean of its trees. This is a large section to be taken yearly out of our forest resources. With all that we are yet doing in the way of tree-planting, the balance is largely against us. With all the interest and energy manifested by the young West on this subject, stimulated by her most pressing need, we are only planting one acre while thirty-five are laid bare by the axe and fire. And we must consider also that the work of destruction goes on at an increasing rate from year to year as our population and our industries increase, and that the trees which are felled are the product, on the average, of more than a century's growth, while those we plant must grow during a century before they can fill their place.—N. H. Egleston, in Harper's for April.

CURE FOR CRIBBING.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman writes: 'Let me mention a cure for cribbing in horses. At least I found a cure for my first attempt in horseflesh. The animal was warranted in writing, 'free from all tricks,' etc. The first ten days no trick was observed. Subsequently my purchase proved to be a determined cribber. The seller was apparently astonished. Nothing of the kind ever occurred while he owned the horse. An inspection of the stable where the horse had been kept showed no traces of chewed woodwork. My brother-in-law, accustomed to horses all his life, was sorely puzzled. He was convinced there 'was some game,' and game there was. Convinced that I had been 'sold,' I retaliated by finding out that the seller had used a paste made of red pepper and brown soap, lightly applied wherever and whenever he discovered marks of teeth in the stall, the paste being masked by dust scattered on top. Thus it was, the horse thinking my woodwork was like his last stable, let the timbers alone at first. I tried the remedy. The horse has not attempted to crib for four months, and a stranger would never imagine that a hundred little spots within reach of his head have bits of the paste. The horse knows it, however, and lets my stall alone.'

A teacher in a Boston Sunday school asked his class 'Who were the publicans?' referring to Christ's eating with 'publicans and sinners.' From five or six small boys came at once the ready response, 'Those who voted for Garfield.' And as if to clinch the matter, a little seven year old added, 'And I am a publican.'

An Indiana evangelist asks: "Can a democrat get to heaven?" We hasten to say that he can—if he has had the handling of the returns.—Boston Transcript.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1882.

CHARLES R. DARWIN, the eminent scientist and author of the 'Darwinian theory' of the origin of man, died in England Thursday, at the age of 73.

THE House at Washington voted Wednesday that neither Cannon nor Campbell should be admitted to a seat in that body. Cannon was allowed to speak for himself, and nailed up his own coffin by a stout defense of polygamy, as being a Heaven-ordained institution.

"THERE'S millions in it"—that new State prison at Concord, which has been occupied a little over two years; and now it is just discovered that there is absolutely no chance for drainage, and the committee on prisons has reported a bill to the Senate for abandoning it and removing the convicts back to the old Charlestown prison, after $75,000 has been expended in putting it in shape. This is a bright illustration of the way the State's business is sometimes—though happily not always—mismanaged.

GEN. BUTLER has delivered himself on the Chinese question in a characteristic letter to our minister to that country, in which he objects to Chinese immigration as not being immigration in its proper sense; says they earn wages, but do not spend, saving their money to take back home with them; and justifies their exclusion by the example of the Pilgrim Fathers in expelling Roger Williams from Massachusetts Bay, which seems rather farfetched, to say the least. He makes some good points, of course, and also manages to throw out a sop to the Irish voters, with a view, doubtless, to possible future needs in that direction.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR sent a message to Congress on Tuesday calling attention to the necessity of an appropriation for repairing the Mississippi levees at once, and of permanently improving the navigation of the river and providing for the safety of the people in the valley. To do this properly he thinks may ultimately require an expenditure of $30,000,000. In view of the regular breaking of the levees with every flood, it would seem to be a serious question whether the right way of controlling the waters has yet been found. With more water passing down the river than its banks can possibly contain, it is folly to attempt to wall it in, without making additional outlets.

BUSINESS circles in New York and throughout the country were greatly surprised last Saturday by the announcement that A. T. Stewart & Co. were to retire from business. Mr. Stewart began business in 1825, in a small way. In 1864 his income was $4,000,000, and in three years his business amounted to $203,000,000. When he died in 1876 he had the largest store in the world. Judge Henry Hilton bought the business from Mrs. Stewart, but the brain which had hitherto successfully directed the immense concern was gone, and though Judge Hilton professes to retire merely because he wants rest, it is generally understood that the business has steadily diminished since he took it, and that instead of eclipsing Stewart as he had expected, the judge bade fair to prove a dismal failure, and so has discreetly given up.

THE House at Boston has rejected the bill giving women the right to vote for presidential electors, by a vote of 66 to 107. The same body will probably pass the Senate bill restricting liquor licenses in every city and town to one for each 1000 inhabitants, with the single exception of Boston, where, queerly enough, one for every 500 is allowed. Is this because the Legislature meets there? A committee has been appointed to investigate a charge that a member of the House was offered a pass over the Boston & Maine Railroad if he would vote for a certain measure. The agricultural committee has reported in favor of a $9000 appropriation to the Agricultural College at Amherst, for a new building and repairs. The bill for the sale of the State stock in the New York & New England road is to be considered next Wednesday.

A letter from the Southwest gives the following description of a submerged plantation: "As we passed Mr. Calhoun's dwelling there was but three feet between the water and the eaves. Outside the back of the house there was a scaffold built, on which the family were preparing a morning meal. It was only two inches above the water, and on it were the family supplies. A patch of earth on the floor of the scaffold afforded a bed for the fire. A small plank-way permitted a passage to the interior, which could be reached only in a stooping posture. The furniture was triced up to the ceiling by ropes; some of it, however, was standing in the water on a scaffold which proved to be too low. A fleet of dugouts were tied around the platform, apparently one for each of the children. As the Susie steamed close to the house the little fellows looked on in wonderment."

There was a very brilliant auroral display last Sunday night, which was visible over a large section of the country, and seriously affected the telegraph wires, as well as many people. At Cleveland, O., a minister was prostrated in his pulpit, many ladies fainted in the churches, and people out of doors experienced strangely oppressive sensations.

There was so small a number out at the meeting of the executive committee of the improvement association Monday evening, that no business was transacted, and the meeting was adjourned to Monday evening, May 1st, at Dr. Stowe's house, when it is hoped there will be a full attendance.

J. B. Shaw's little son Albert, 2½ years old, met with a serious mishap Wednesday afternoon. A bottle of ammonia had been thoughtlessly left on a table within his reach, and getting hold of it the little fellow took a swallow of the fiery fluid, burning his mouth, throat and stomach terribly. Remedies were promptly applied, and there is a fair chance of his recovery.

Rev. B. M. Fullerton, who left Palmer to accept the pastorate of the Congregational church at Waltham last Summer, doubtless expected to go through one year, at least, without a disturbance of his salary; but his people seem to have become dissatisfied so soon, and at a meeting of the parish the other day they voted to add $200 to his annual compensation. Such are the disappointments of life.

The project of sprinkling the streets is being agitated somewhat, and a subscription paper may be passed around among our business men, to see if enough money can be secured to warrant a venture of this sort. The thick dust of the past few days has been an uncomfortable reminder of our needs in this direction, and it is to be hoped that our citizens will take hold of the matter in a way to carry it through.

The adjourned meeting of the Boston & Albany stockholders will be held at Boston next Wednesday, and will without doubt call out a full attendance. A good many of the stockholders are inclined to vote against the proposition to buy the stock owned by the State, and will be on hand with their votes; while the lady stockholders will hardly miss the opportunity for another free trip to the Hub, at this inviting season of Spring openings.

Cashier Dewey of the national bank entertained the members of the dramatic club with one of Landlord Stone's capital suppers Thursday evening, at the Nassowanno House. During the evening, Judge Robinson, in behalf of the club, presented Miss Lizzie Holden with a handsome copy of 'Atala,' by Chateaubriand, elegantly illustrated by Dore, as a token of their appreciation of the service she has rendered them in their recent entertainments.

Gov. Long and Lieut. Gov. Weston came to Palmer Thursday noon, on the express from Boston, and were taken to Enfield by Landlord Weeks, in a carriage drawn by four stylish horses, to attend the wedding of Councilor Woods's daughter. The members of the council came up on the 1.22 p. m. express on a short visit to the State Primary School, where they were joined later in the afternoon by the Governor and Lieut. Governor. The party took the 4.30 train for Boston.

The Palmer Dramatic Club have generously given two entertainments this season for the benefit respectively of the improvement association and the band. Now they propose to have one for their own benefit, and give our citizens an opportunity next Thursday evening to listen to Mrs. Partington's comical eccentricities. The play merits a full house, and the club deserve it, also, as an evidence of the people's appreciation of their public spirit. Let every seat in the hall be occupied.

A. J. and H. A. Northrop are busily at work cutting off the wood from their 14-acre lot at Blanchardville, purchased last winter. They have had five men chopping, who will probably finish up this week. The logs are being sawed as fast as Davidson Brothers of Charlton can work them up with their steam saw mill, at the rate of 10,000 feet per day. It will take them three or four weeks to finish sawing, after which they will move up to this village and attack the pile of logs cut by Brainerd Bros.

A house in the north part of the town, owned and occupied by Mrs. Wester, near C. R. Shaw's place, was burned about 2 o'clock yesterday morning, together with nearly all the furniture, and $195 in money, which was kept in a bureau drawer. The fire is supposed to have started from a defective chimney, and was under such headway when discovered that there was little opportunity for saving anything. Insured in the Fire and Marine of Springfield for $800. The barn, which was near the house, was saved.

The school committee have adopted a new form of voucher, which is a marked improvement over anything in use by them heretofore. It has been the custom in the past for individual members of the committee to draw orders for money on the town treasurer, each one examining, auditing and paying his own bills. Under the new order the committee draw no orders on the treasurer, individually or collectively. Each voucher must be signed by two members of the committee, and it is then passed over to the selectmen, who draw the proper order for the money, the voucher being filed away, and showing at a glance the name, amount, and on what account the money was paid.

The summer time table on the Boston & Albany Railroad will go into effect on Monday, May 1, when the fast New York express now leaving Boston at 4 p. m, will be made a limited express of six cars, leaving half an hour later, but reaching New York at the same hour as at present, making the run through in six hours. This express will then leave Palmer at 6.37, instead of 6.17 as at present. No passengers will be taken on this train at Boston for points east of Palmer, and commutation tickets will not be accepted upon it. The 3 p. m. train from Boston, which is now an accommodation from Worcester, will be made an express train through, leaving Palmer at 5.34, and will give passengers west 30 minutes at Springfield for supper, the train awaiting a new accommodation train which will follow from Worcester, leaving this station at 5.57. The 11.02 a. m. express west will leave at 11.04. The only change in trains going east will be in the evening limited express, which will leave Palmer at 8.39 instead of 8.28.

Twenty persons have applied to the selectmen for liquor licenses of various classes, thirteen of whom ask for two licenses each, as may be seen from the notices in another column. It is safe to say that some of the applicants will be disappointed, for the selectmen can hardly ignore the large vote cast at the annual town meeting against granting any licenses—a vote so large that five more ballots on the negative side would have prevented the issuing of any licenses whatever in town. If this vote meant anything it meant that the number of licenses should be sharply restricted, and we trust the selectmen will so consider it. A bill is now pending in the Legislature restricting the number of licenses to one for each 1000 inhabitants, and it bids fair to become a law within a few days. The selectmen might profitably consider this, in determining the number of licenses to be granted. One thing is certain: No license should be granted for the sale of liquor in any building containing a tenement under the same roof. It gives too good an opportunity for violations of the law.

If you want to enjoy a right down good hearty laugh two hours long, go to Wales Hall next Thursday evening and see "Mrs. Partington." The "Old Lady" and "Ike" will be at home, and can entertain in good shape if any one can. 'Most every one has read the sayings and doings of these peculiar persons, but it is generally agreed that it is necessary to see them acted to get the full effect. Charles Fostelle's personation of Mrs. Partington is simply perfect, while "Ike" is the most mischievous and "numerous" little chap imaginable, cutting up all sorts of pranks with the "Deacon" and "Judge." The company were in Springfield recently, and the Republican says of their performance: "Charles Fostelle had a large audience to see his 'Mrs. Partington' last night, and one of the biggest matinees the house has seen for years. The audience enjoyed it hugely, and laughed immoderately, and that of course is the sole object of the performance, neither plot nor construction being of much account in pieces of this kind. Mr. Fostelle has clearly found his inspiration in Neil Burgess, and does not equal him in some respects; in others he excels him, notably in that though boisterous and broadly humorous he is at no time coarse—a fault which sadly mars the other's work. Mr. Fostelle acts cleverly and is well supported, and taken all round the performance is uncommonly full of fun."

DISTRICT COURT.

Mary Ann McDonald was up last Saturday for drunkenness, and in default of $4.85 fine and costs was committed.

Louis St. John and James Lynch of Thorndike were tried for malicious mischief. St. John was fined $1 without costs, and paid. Lynch was fined $5 and costs, $10.55, and appealed to the superior court.

On Monday Officer Palmer returned a search warrant upon premises occupied by John Conlin in Bondsville, finding about 55 gallons of cider and fixtures for selling. Frank Coughlin was committed for drunkenness in default of fine and costs of $5.85.

On Tuesday John Conlin, liquor selling last Sunday, pleaded not guilty. The case was continued to Wednesday, when he retracted his plea and entered one of guilty. The court sentenced him to pay $50 and costs, continuing the case for execution of sentence. Other cases against the same defendant were placed on file, upon his promise of good behavior.

On Thursday James and Sarah Cook, for larceny of two lap robes from carriage in front of the Catholic church last February, were each sentenced to six months in the house of correction. Henry Hall of Monson, for assault with shot gun upon Nelson Buskirk, was held to appear before the grand jury in May, and in default of sureties in the sum of $1000 was committed. Wm. Shaw for drunkenness paid $4.85, and John Lynes $5. The case against Dexter W. Lombard, up yesterday for larceny of hay, was continued to May 1st.

THE LAST TOWN MEETING.

At the adjourned town meeting on Monday the committee appointed to consider the question of additional school room at Three Rivers made quite an exhaustive report, showing there was immediate need of two additional rooms for school purposes there, and that the town was practically confined to one of three plans—making an addition to the present school house, or building a new house either on the Belchertown side of the river, or on the street leading to Thorndike. The citizens of the village seemed largely in favor of building an addition to the present school house, and the sum of $3500 was accordingly voted for this purpose, this amount to cover also all necessary alterations and repairs in the present building. R. E. Knowlton, John Clough and David Milliken were appointed a building committee to have charge of the work. The sum of $350 was also appropriated for the purchase of a lot on the Thorndike road, near the house of A. L. Haynes, on which to erect a school house some time in the future. C. L. Gardner, John Clough and David Milliken are the purchasing committee. The committee on sewers were not ready to make any report on account of the shortness of time allowed for considering so important a matter, and they were given leave to further consider the subject, and report at the next annual meeting. An appropriation of $1200 was made for land damages on the new roads accepted by the town. This brings the total appropriations up to $29,690, just $725 less than last year. The committee appointed to look up an apparent discrepancy of $200 in the payment of a school teacher reported that it was caused by one year's business lapping over into another, and that the treasury had not sufferred loss. The committee suggested, however, that a change was desirable in the manner of drawing money from the treasury, in view of the loose way in which orders have been drawn in the past.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. L. F. Shepardson will preach to-morrow at the Baptist church, of which he was formerly pastor. Mr. McKillop of Newton has declined his call to the pastorate of this church, having decided to continue his studies at the theological seminary another year.

Capt. A. S. Wall keeps nine hens and a rooster. During the month of February he had 182 eggs, and in March 215. This appears to be the best record we have yet seen. The cost of keeping them the two months was a little more than one dollar. He feeds them corn, wheat and food left from the table.

R. M. Reynolds has the foundation in for his 200 feet warehouse.

Fred W. King, formerly clerk in Flynt & Co's. store, has taken a position in the Springfield post office as register clerk.

Some of the colored boys living on State street were handling a loaded gun Wednesday morning, and its contents of powder and wad only severely injured a 6-years-old urchin, and it is claimed it was all accidental.

The Mutual Improvement Society met Tuesday evening and chose officers for the year, and it is hoped that much interest will be felt.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union convention met in the town hall Thursday, and services were held throughout the day and evening, Mrs. Livermore being present. It is hoped that active measures will be taken to suppress this great evil of intemperance in our village, and the people are waiting to see who will be the movers in the matter.

BRIMFIELD.

The dwelling house of Pardon P. Allen, of South Warren, was burned Wednesday afternoon. The fire caught from a portable engine, which he had set up in his door yard for the purpose of sawing wood. Loss $1800, partly insured. Furniture mostly saved.

The Stars, of the Hitchcock Free High School, and the Wesleyans of Wilbraham, played an interesting game of ball on the grounds of the latter Saturday afternoon. The following is the score by innings:

INNINGS.	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9

Hubbard, Henry F. Brown, Wm. H. Sherman; treasurer, Henry F. Brown. The meeting was adjourned to Monday, May 1st, when the slips will be rented for the ensuing year.

WALES.

Farmers are busy plowing, and some have commenced to plant.

Daniel S. Green has bought 15 acres of land of Julia A. Parker, for $1400.

Geo. H. Needham, L. A. Fisk and H. A. McFarland have been licensed as auctioneers.

H. A. McFarland has been re-elected secretary and treasurer of the Wales Savings Bank.

A. J. Hamilton, the Hegan Mill boarding house keeper, is going to Huntington to engage in the same business.

S. Wyman, who has kept the Shaw Mill boarding house, has taken a private tenement, and Mr. Simonds takes his place.

Rev. C. A. Walters, who has been pastor of the Methodist church for three years, goes to Southwick, and Rev. C. R. Sherman takes his place at Wales.

The estate of Alvin Colburn, deceased, was appraised last week, amounting to about $4300. After the debts are paid there will not be a large sum left.

Rev. H. P. Smith, formerly pastor of the Baptist church here, now of Wallingford, Ct., has been spending a few days here with his family among his friends.

As E. Cady was working in his garden with a pair of horses, he slipped from the pole and was thrown directly under and between the horses, and was for a moment in imminent danger, but fortunately escaped without a scratch, only fearing that somebody had seen him down—as they did.

The town has raised $300 to be expended on the Dimmick hill, on the Palmer road, which will be appreciated by people who travel to Palmer. It was also voted to build two new school houses, and $150 was raised to build a new fence around the old cemetery, near the old Baptist church; making about $1500 more than usual for the tax-payers to grumble over.

WARE AND VICINITY.

T. W. Barney has sold his place at Ware Center to James Paige, for $1050.

Z. Peltier, the market man, has a nice family of foxes, a mother and four young ones.

Prof. Mather, of Amherst College, is to preach at the East Congregational church next Sunday.

The jurors drawn to attend the next term of court at Northampton are A. D. Hitchcock and Francis E. Hall.

Bullard & Rugg have a cow at their market, killed this week, from which was taken 130 pounds of rough tallow. Dressed 876 lbs.

The receipts at the post office for the past quarter were: For stamps and postal cards, $1187.42; box rent, $115.80; waste paper, 80 cents; total, $1304.02.

D. A. Jennison of the Hampshire House has not applied for a liquor license, and will hereafter run a temperance hotel; in fact has not had any bar for several months.

A pleasant social gathering was held in the chapel parlors on Thursday evening, to bid good-bye to Dr. Perkins, who left on Friday for Boston, and sails in the Palmyra to-day.

J. A. Sandford and L. W. Robinson have started on their European tour, having sailed from New York on Thursday. They were accompanied by Dr. Hooker of Springfield, who has been for a long time an intimate friend of Mr. Sandford.

The selectmen having received several applications for victualers' licenses, and believing that such applications were made to enable the parties applying to obtain certain classes of liquor licenses, consider such reasons insufficient, and will not at present issue any victualers' licenses.

The selectmen have posted notices giving the names of the applicants for liquor licenses. There are sixteen different persons and firms that have applied, some of them for both the first and fourth class; so there are twenty-two licenses called for. Although it has been reported that several had been refused licenses, there has as yet been no action taken, and will not be until after next Wednesday, when all persons interested in the granting of licenses are requested to meet the selectmen for a hearing. And at that time, if they can be convinced that it is for the best interests of the town, and that those who have applied are the best adapted to serve the town in this matter, there may be a goodly number of licenses granted. But, let the number be great or small, it seems to be the sentiment of the public that those who receive them should look well as to the provisions and requirements of these licenses, as it is expected they will be required to act strictly in accordance with those provisions.

A CARD.—The undersigned return thanks to the many friends and neighbors who have so kindly assisted us in our late affliction.

HENRY GLYNN.
ANNIE E. GLYNN.

Monson, April 22, 1882.

The Governor of Ohio has issued a proclamation setting apart April 27 as a day for planting forest trees by the roadsides, in groves, and about homes in that State. The Great Springfield Grain Elevator.

This unique building is situated on Lyman St., Springfield, by the side of the Boston & Albany Railroad. The structure is of brick, three stories above the basement. It is 86 feet by 75 feet on the ground. It is heavily timbered to stand the great weight of grain. It has a capacity of 100,000 bushels of grain and 8000 barrels of flour. The grain is taken from the cars by steam power and elevated to the attic, where it is screened and distributed to the bins. It can empty a car load of grain in 30 minutes. All the grain is weighed by Fairbank's Hopper Scales, placed in the basement. These scales can weigh 100 bushels or more at once. A large stock of baled hay is also stored in the basement. So great has become the business of Newton & Fuller, the occupants of this building, that its large accommodations are hardly sufficient. Newton & Fuller are dealers in grain, flour, hay, Mapes', Reeds', and Baker & Co's. commercial fertilizers; also agents for the Buckeye Mower, and the Perry Spring Tooth Rake.

HOW TO SECURE HEALTH.—It seems strange that any one will suffer from derangements brought on by an impure condition of the blood, when SCOVILL'S SARSAPARILLA AND STILLINGIA, or BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP will restore perfect health to the physical organization It is indeed a strengthening syrup, pleasant to take, and has proven itself to be the BEST BLOOD PURIFIER ever discovered, effectually curing scrofula, syphylitic disorders, weakness of the kidneys, erysipelas, malaria; all nervous disorders and debility, bilious complaints and all diseases indicating an impure condition of the blood, liver, kidneys, stomach, skin, etc. It corrects digestion. A single bottle will prove to you its merits as a health renewer, for it ACTS LIKE A CHARM, especially when the complaint is of an exhaustive nature, having a tendency to lessen the natural vigor of the brain and nervous system.

BAKER'S PAIN PANACEA cures pain in man and beast. For use externally and internally.

DR. ROGER'S VEGETABLE WORM SYRUP instantly destroys worms and removes the secretions which cause them.

It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it, Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston. wholesale agents. 1y32

VARIOUS CAUSES—

Advancing years, care, sickness, disappointment, and hereditary predisposition—all operate to turn the hair gray, and either of them inclines it to shed prematurely. Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore faded or gray, light or red hair to a rich brown or deep black, as may be desired. It softens and cleanses the scalp, giving it a healthy action. It removes and cures dandruff and humors. By its use falling hair is checked, and a new growth will be produced in all cases where the follices are not destroyed or the glands decayed. Its effects are beautifully shown on brashy, weak, or sickly hair, on which a few applications will produce the gloss and freshness of youth. Harmless and sure in its results, it is incomparable as a dressing, and is especially valued for the soft lustre and richness of tone it imparts.

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR is colorless; contains neither oil nor dye; and will not soil white cambric; yet it lasts long on the hair, and keeps it fresh and vigorous, imparting an agreeable perfume.

Shut the Door.

Were you brought up in a saw-mill?
  Ever in a house before?
Did you work about a brick-kiln
  In the blessed days of yore?
Did you tend about a windmill
  Upon some rocky shore?
Or live upon a hillside
  Where the wind could always soar,
And couldn't get a gorgeous fill
  Of cutting to the core?

In any case, my blooming pill,
  If you wouldn't lose your gore,
And rile a man who'll freely kill,
  Or scrub you on the floor—
And break your heart and bend your will,
  And ashes on you pour;
And hunt up every little bill
  You owe, and many more;
And stab you with a goose quill,
  You thoughtless, brazen bore!
Why, then, you blooming mudsill!
  Confound you, shut the door!

Don't grow old and rusty and cross, afraid of nonsense and fun. Tolerate the follies and crudities of youth. Gray hair and wrinkles you cannot escape, but you need not grow old in feeling unless you choose. And so long as your age is only the outside, you will win confidence from the young, and find your life all the brighter for contact with theirs. But you have too many grave thoughts, too many weighty anxieties and duties, too much to do, to make this trifling possible, you say. The very reason, my friend, why you should cultivate fun, nonsense, lightness of heart — because you're 'weary of thinking.' Then do try to be young even if you have to be foolish in so doing. One cannot be wise all the time. You in particular, my gentle reader.

Memorial Hall, which formed the Centennial Art Building at Philadelphia, is in a state of dismal dilapidation and decay. The wind has torn off portions of the galvanized iron coverings, and the dome is in such a leaky condition that the tapestries, bronzes, Chinese enamels and other articles collected by the Pennsylvania Museum and School of Industrial Art, which has possession of the edifice, are in great danger of damage from water. Two years ago the large statue of America, which crowned the dome, had to be taken down, as it was crumbling to pieces and liable to collapse and crush through to the ground. The whole building, which cost $1,500,000, is in a bad way, and in constant need of repair.

A Toledo school principal complains that the publishers of school books make a profit of four hundred per cent on readers, and eight hundred per cent on arithmetics. Well, goodness gracious, Principal Streeter, you don't want a publisher to publish a book for nothing, do you? You may give away the publishers, if you will, but they can't give away their books. P. S. No more they don't.—Burlington Hawkeye.

A candidate for the bar upon being examined for admission, was asked to define the bankrupt law. After a moment's reflection he replied:—"The bankrupt law is a system of jurisprudence providing for an equitable distribution of the property of a bankrupt among the attorneys and the receiver." This profound insight, in one so young, gained the candidate unqualified admission.

At a meeting of patriotic artizans in London recently, to protest against the Channel Tunnel, the chairman in his opening said:—'Gentlemen, we are here to protest against this Tunnel Channel—I mean this Chunnel Tannel; I mean we are met to oppose this Tannel Chunnel.' Here the disabled orator sat down.

A Miss Buchanan once rallying her cousin, an officer, on his courage, said: 'Now, Harry, do you really mean to tell me you can walk up to a cannon's mouth without fear?' 'Yes,' he replied, promptly, 'or to a Buchanan's, either.' And he did.

The young milkman and his girl stood before the justice of the peace. 'You take this milk—Ahem!—this man for butter or for worse?' the mighty man of the law inquired. The girl said it never a-curd to her before, but she supposed she would if that was the only whey.

'Melinda, I don't like the looks of that lover of yours.' 'Why, papa, dear?' 'I don't think he's possessed of any staying qualities.' 'Papa, then his looks deceive you awfully. He's superabundantly blessed with staying qualities. Why, he'd stay to breakfast if I'd let him.'

It is now announced on the authority of an 'eminent physician' that it is not healthy to rise before eight o'clock in the morning. This applies only to men. Wives, it is said, can rise as early as ever, and start the fire as heretofore.

When the teacher asked what was the feminine of tailor, a small boy on a front seat in a public school in Brockton promptly exclaimed, "Dressmaker," and was greatly delighted that he was able to get in the answer first.

Last week an Ohio man on his travels found a shell on the Gettysburg battle-field. He took it home and put it in the stove to see if it was real. It was genuine. But the stove is the most glaring imitation you ever looked at.

When I publicly testified that I had been cured of a terrible skin humor by the Cuticura Remedies, I did so that others might be cured, and do not regret the time given to answering inquiries."

"How do you manage," said a lady to her friend, "to appear so happy all the time?" "I always have Parker's Ginger Tonic handy," was the reply, "and thus keep myself and family in good health. When I am well I always feel good natured." See other column. a

WHAT HAPPENED TO

MR. JOSEPH BEACH.

STONE IN THE KIDNEY EXPELLED AFTER USING DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" ABOUT TWO WEEKS.

One of the most remarkable cases that has ever been brought to the notice of the public is that of Mr. J. S. Beach, of Stone Bridge, Ulster Co., N. Y. Mr. Beach had suffered since October 18th, 1874, from the presence of Calculus or Stone in the right Kidney. No less than seven physicians were employed at different times, to whom Mr. Beach paid hundreds of dollars for medical treatment, with only temporary relief from his agony.

By the urgent solicitations of his friends he was induced to try Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy"—experienced a marked improvement from the first day he began to use the medicine; on the 15th day of September he voided a stone as large as could be passed through the natural channel.

Mr. Beach concludes a long letter to Dr. Kennedy by saying: "It will always afford me pleasure to recommend the "Favorite Remedy" to those who may be suffering from difficulties of the kidneys and bladder, or any disorders arising from an impure state of the blood." The "Favorite Remedy" is sold by all druggists. The Doctor's only address is Rondout, New York. 4w4

A SPRING DEFENCE

HOW TO REPEL THE ASSAULTS OF ILL HEALTH—DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" MEANS SOMETHING FOR YOU.

The months of March, April and May are the three successive arches of a bridge which connect the season of ice and sleet with that of leaves and roses. No less in respect of health than of outward natural phenomenon is this true. Spring is a trying season for invalids, and particularly for those who either suffer, or are liable to suffer, from Biliousness, Kidney Complaints and Constipation of the Bowels, and for women who are chronically subject to any of the long catalogue of physical ailments to which their delicate sex is heir. Indications of disease in Spring should be heeded at once. A fatal attack may easily result from neglect or a disordered condition of the bowels. The ounce of prevention may be had where tons of cure—or attempted cure—may be unavailing. Are you vexed or troubled in Spring with indigestion, torpid liver, want of appetite, constipation, or a feverish state of the skin? If so, take without an hour's unnecessary delay, Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." No medicine is so harmless and yet so quick and positive in its action. It is Nature's own idea, condensed and made tangible by human skill. Do not leave home when going upon a journey without a bottle in your valise. You cannot possibly put one dollar in any other shape where it can render you so essential service. The "Favorite Remedy" is almost instantaneous in its action, but does not tear you to pieces with its violence nor nauseate you with disgust. It frees the liver from bile and sets the machinery of your body into normal and healthy operation. Remember: Dr. D. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. Ask your druggist for it and take nothing else. Price One Dollar a bottle. 4w2

Every-day Heroes.

Oh, yes; they are all around us,
And in every walk of life;
Heroes the best, that stand the test
In many an unmarked strife;
Heroes of home, of shop, of farm,
And at duty's call alone,
Though unaware of honor's share,
And by noisy fame unblown.

From a flame-girt lofty window
Wild faces and hands entreat
Vast crowds, agape, that no means can shape,
For aid from the icy street;
When a bootblack climbs an adjacent pole,
And swift from its peak impels
A rope of wire down the wall of fire,
And the cry, "They are saved!" upswells.

High waving his danger signal,
The unpaid switchman speeds
O'er the quivering ridge of a broken bridge,
That to death and destruction leads,
To sink, as the thundering train slows up,
O'ertaxed, in the headlight glare,
While but few can know what to him they owe,
Though he should be dying there.

Oh, yes! they are all around us,
And to instance their deeds were vain,
So hidden away in the crowds are they,
In the paths obscure and plain;
For those whose chivalry, unesteemed,
Through a lowly lifetime shines,
To such in the rout whose acts stand out
For the rest like starry signs.

And nothing is lost, though hidden,
That springs from heroic seed;
In the larger force and the higher course
That are shaped from a single deed.
The environment of a mass of men
May brighten and spread apace,
Till deeds shall throng all paths along
To the glory of all the race.

A MYSTERIOUS CLOCK.

During the summer of 1810 there might have been observed loitering about the Tuileries a spare, shabbily-dressed man, past the prime of life, restless and watchful in his movements, but wearing, in spite of his humble garb, an air of faded respectability and character. He was a decayed Spanish noble, Don Monsen Chavarri by name, and one thing noticeable about him was his persistency in endeavoring to get an audience of the Emperor. Foiled in every attempt, either through accident or the suspicions of the attendants, he invariably received his rebuffs in silence, and withdrew—merely to renew his importunities. Repulsed to-day, to-morrow found him at his post. He haunted the palace like a specter. Even the gamins soon grew familiar with the story of his hopeless quest, and he began in time to be treated with that sort of pitiful consideration which is usually accorded to those of unsound mind. At length, however, there came a day, when, in the Rue Rivoli, as the emperor was returning from a review, a pistol shot rang out from the corner of the court, and the bullet, whistling through the line of outriders, buried itself in a panel of the imperial carriage. The police at once charged the crowd, and among the number arrested was our friend the Spaniard. At the trial, there being no evidence against him, he was acquitted, but warned to instantly leave Paris. Acting upon the warning, he disappeared, and all traces of him were lost.

It was some two years after this occurrence that there began to circulate among quidnuncs of the capital reports of a marvelous clock to be seen in that city, which illustrated by means of automatic figures, an episode in the life of the emperor. It was designed for presentation to that personage. It was said to be the work of a famous artisan, who had lately arrived, incognitio, from foreign parts, accompanied by a young lady, his daughter, who, in a supposed fit of eccentricity, had taken lodgings in a humble and obscure quarter of the Faubourg St. Antoine. The reports of the wonderful, almost supernatural performances of this piece of mechanism and the mystery surrounding its owner and inventor, gave rise for a short time, and in certain circles, to no small amount of gossip. This gradually died away and the artisan and his clock were alike forgotten, when an event occurred which restored them to more than their former prominence, and entitled them to a place in history.

Fouche, one morning, in his office, received a letter from his secret agent in Spain, which contained information of a most startling and important character. Its perusal threw him into a state of unusual excitement, and its result was an immediate descent of the police upon the mysterious shop of the Faubourg St. Antoine, with orders to arrest the artisan and his daughter, secure the premises, and carefully guard the stock, tools, implements and other contents from being touched or displaced till further opportunity offered for a thorough investigation. The party detailed for the duty having departed, Fouche reseated himself, and waited with ill-concealed anxiety the arrival of the prisoners. After a considerable lapse of time, the officer charged with the arrest returned empty-handed. His report was soon made. The lady in the case, the daughter, had that morning, at an early hour, left her house in the Faubourg, accompanied by a young lad, who bore a large, heavy portemanteau. The two had been traced to the gates of Montmartre, beyond which no point nor clue to their movements could be obtained. The old workman himself had left the shop an hour before the visit of the police, locking doors and barring windows behind him. He bore in his arms what was apparently, according to the applewoman opposite, a great square box, covered with oilskin. It seemed heavy. He sat down awhile on his doorstep, when a caleche came by, into which he put himself and box, with the assistance of the driver, and was driven off at a rapid pace. The caleche was brown; the driver was in green livery. A gendarme was following him, and another was guarding the shop in the Faubourg, where, however, nothing remained but a piece of furniture, and a great many scraps of brass and iron. Fouche reflected a moment, when his face suddenly whitened. Without a word, he dashed down the stairway to the street, and sprang into a passing fiacre.

"To the Tuileries!" he shouted. "Double wages for double speed!"

Arrived at the palace, he hastily alighted, and demanded to be at once shown into the presence of the Emperor. Napoleon was in the room in which he received private visitors, and thither the ushers instantly conducted Fouche, who, encountering some delay in the ante-room, impatiently pushed open the folding doors, and entered unannounced. The emperor greeted the intrusion at first with a frown of displeasure, but, instantly recognizing the visitor, resumed his customary expression, and nodded affably. Fouche took in the situation at a single glance. Besides Napoleon there were five persons in the room. Four of these were officials of the palace—chamberlains and armed valets, who frequently attended when he gave audience, to prevent attempts at assassination. The fifth was a man habited in a common workman's blouse, standing apart from the others in a respectful attitude, and holding in his hand a workman's cap. It needed but a glance to assure Fouche that this person was none other than the old familiar goblin of the Tuileries—Don Monsen Chavarri. But how metamorphosed! His hair, formerly gray, was dyed to a glossy blackness; his face was despoiled of its moustache and pointed beard, and his once smooth hands were roughened as though by exposure and toil. At his side stood a large lacquer table, supporting an object on which Fouche's attention was fixed. This was seen at once to be the exact model of the church of Notre Dame, wrought in metal, in the highest style of art, and serving evidently as the case for a clock, since just above the folding doors, which were perfect imitations of those which barred the principal entrance to Notre Dame, were two dials, on one of which the hours and minutes were measured, while on the other a long, sweeping hand described the seconds. Fouche, by a natural impulse, noticed the time indicated by the dials. It lacked a few minutes of noon.

Immediately thereafter he started with nervous alarm as the clock gave a warning note as though about to strike; then suddenly there was a clank of complicated machinery, and the great doors folded slowly inward, exposing the whole gorgeous interior to view. The mimic church was decorated as though for some great fete. Banners and hangings of the richest material and most costly workmanship fluttered from the ceilings and flaunted from the niches in the walls. The aisles were carpeted with tapestry and velvet, and the pillars were clustered with gold and blazing with gems. On the opposite sides of the great nave two thrones were erected, the one being approached by a flight of velvet-covered steps, and canopied with cloth of gold and scarlet velvet, sprinkled with golden bees. And now the great bell in the tower struck one with a reverberating clang; there arose a swell of triumphal music, and a mimic procession, clad in gorgeous robes, moved into view from one of the hidden aisles. At the head of this cortege walked an old man wearing a triple crown, who, as the bell tolled for the second time, ascended the steps of the smaller throne. It was the coronation performed by the automatons.

Napoleon looked on with unusual interest. "Confess, Fouche," said he, "that this is as admirable in its way as the police system in Paris. There is one mistake, however," he continued; "the great doors of Notre Dame were not open on that occasion. The throne was built against them, and the only entrance was through the transverse halls."

"True, sire," said the fictitious artisan, casting a side glance at Fouche, whose name he had just heard pronounced. "True, but your majesty will see that it is a mistake unavoidable here. Like the rest of the world, we have been obliged to sacrifice truth in order to secure effect."

The emperor smiled and remained silent. Meanwhile, Fouche was revolving a dilemma in his mind with the rapidity of one accustomed to act in dangerous crises. There are situations in which a slight vantage in the hands of a dangerous man may set at naught the strength of thousands, and in which the most extraordinary means must be employed to secure what are apparently trifling results. Fouche adopted the course which seemed at first most speedily practicable, since the consideration of first importance was, in this instance, time.

"Your majesty," said he advancing, and speaking rapidly, "may I request your immediate attendance in your cabinet for a matter of utmost consequence—a matter which will not permit of a moment's delay?"

The emperor turned in surprise, and frowned. Chavarri looked up sullenly and silently, and made a suspicious movement toward his clock. With the rapidity of thought Fouche changed his plans.

"Your majesty," said he loudly, and more rapidly than before, "Lady Isidore Chavarri has just been arrested near the Cemetery of Montmartre, charged with a capital crime. She has already been tried by a special tribunal and condemned to death. I come to implore your majesty to grant your pardon."

As he spoke he fixed an intent, searching gaze upon the Spaniard. This time the bolt had struck. The old man's tawny face was taking on a sickly hue, and his limbs trembled.

"This is a most unusual proceeding," said the emperor in amazement. "Who is this lady and what is the nature of her crime?"

Fouche, bent double with suspense, still keeping his eye riveted upon the tawny, changing face, spoke almost imploringly:

"You have trusted me before, sire. I beseech you trust me now. Ask me no questions, but write the pardon."

There was an instant of silence, broken only by the ticking and low music of the clock. The second hand was measuring off the sixtieth minute with rapid, steady sweep. Almost unconsciously, Fouche drew a pistol from his pocket, cocked it unobserved, and, with a face as that of a corpse, was raising it to fire, with a cry to the emperor on his lips, when Chavarri, whose mind seemed torn by contending emotions, bent suddenly over his mechanism, touched a spring concealed in the rear of the tower, and instantly the whole complicated machinery of the clock stopped with a sudden metallic clang. The music ceased, the automatons paused, standing like statues, each in his place, the mimic emperor stretching out his hand for the crown of the Cæsars, and the great bell in the tower poised midway in its swing for the twelfth and final stroke.

"Parbleu!" muttered Fouche, pocketing the pistol and wiping the perspiration from his brow. "Allow me, monsieur," he said, advancing to the table, "to inspect this wonderful specimen of art."

"It is so delicate, monsieur," said Chavarri, hurriedly, still keeping his finger on the secret spring, and warning Fouche off with his unengaged hand.

"Here is the pardon," said the emperor, affixing his signature to a paper as he spoke. "I hold you, Fouche, responsible for results. Well, what next?"

"Our worthy friend's clock is broken, it appears," said Fouche.

"Broken, sire," said the Spaniard, "and with it the plans of a lifetime. And," he added, casting down his eyes, and speaking in a querulous, broken voice, "since, when one's hopes are broken one cares but little where he goes, I wish a passport to leave France."

Fouche took up the cue immediately.

"I have to request, sire," said he, "that you also make out a full and free pardon for the accomplice of the Lady Isidore Chavarri—her father, Don Monsen Chavarri, of Seville."

The emperor smiled bitterly. His active mind had already compassed the situation, and without a word either of expostulation or inquiry, he seized a pen and wrote. Then, having finished and signed the double pardon, he advanced with it in his hand.

"Our friend here," said he, "doubtless knows where these persons are to be found, and to him I confide these papers."

The old man, still jealously keeping his hand on the spring of the mechanism, read aloud:

"A full permission to Don Monsen and Donna Isidore Chavarri to leave France immediately, without hindrance or question."

"Add," said he, "'and alive.'"

"You would have made a good diplomat," said Napoleon, as he made the required addition.

Chavarri hesitated for a moment, removed his hand lingeringly from the spring, and bowing his head, glided toward the door. Just upon the threshold he turned in sudden dismay.

"Where shall I find my daughter?" he asked.

"When she is found we will send monsieur word," sneered Fouche.

An expression of the most intense malignity flashed across the old man's face, and with an oath he sprang toward the table in the room. But a pistol confronted him.

"The pardons are forfeited," said Fouche.

"No," said the emperor, "let him pass."

Chavarri, with a look of wonder, wheeled slowly about and disappeared.

After his departure, Napoleon stood for a short time in the center of the apartment in a profound reverie. Then, as his gaze fell upon the clock and the automaton standing beneath the suspended crown within, he bent forward, and regarded the figure attentively.

"So," he said, "this was to have been my successor."

It is scarcely necessary to add that the clock proved, on examination, to be an infernal machine of the most ingenious and deadly description. Concealed beneath the metallic slab which formed the pavement of the mimic chapel, and which was constructed to fold back at the proper moment, was found a triple row of small wrought iron barrels, loaded heavily with slugs and balls, arranged to cover an arc of forty-five degrees, at a distance of twenty yards from the machine. No one within that range could possibly have withstood their discharge, exploded simultaneously, exactly when the hands on the dial indicated the hour of noon; but a spring on the outside of the case gave the manipulator power to alter the "set" of the works and discharge them sooner if necessary.

A few months after the occurrence of the incidents narrated above, Fouche received a letter from Chavarri, then in England, written in the vein in which men who have played a desperate game, and lost, write occasionally to those who have outwitted them. The writer stated that the clock was entirely the work of his own hands, and that he and his daughter alone were concerned in the plot which had been frustrated by Fouche's promptness. As for himself, he had had little expectation of escaping, having freely resolved to involve himself, if necessary, in the destruction which should overwhelm the emperor. His daughter, the only person on earth for whom he retained any affection, he could not afford thus to sacrifice. He had made provision elsewhere for her support, and she had departed at as early an hour as possible, while he himself had proceeded to the palace at eleven. No personal danger, no promised honor, nothing, in short, but the cunningly devised falsehood regarding his daughter could have induced Chavarri to stop the hands of the fatal clock. He also confessed that it was he who, two years before, had fired the shot in the Rue de Rivoli. Chavarri subsequently died in extreme poverty in London. Of the after fate of his daughter nothing is known. His clock, despoiled of the murderous portion of its machinery, was preserved for several years in the Tuileries, and was finally destroyed by an accidental fire and the falling of a wall.

NEAR THE MARK.

When four wood-larks are allowed to do all the singing in the forest, and four seraphs do all the singing in heaven, then can our Protestant churches afford to depend for their "sacred music" upon four persons standing in the organ-loft, sometimes with throats hardly yet rested from the toil of the opera, "executing" the duty in some such style as the following, viz:

Oh! for a man
Oh! for a man
Oh! for a man-sion in the skies.

We'll catch the flee
We'll catch the flee
We'll catch the flee-ting hours.

Pity our pol
Pity our pol
Pity our pol-luted souls.

Oh! take the pil
Oh! take the pil
Oh! take the pil-grim home.

With reverence let the saints appear,
And bow-wow-wow before the Lord.

Why she doesn't count the years: In the green room of a Parisian theatre the conversation turned upon the delicate subject of age. Presently a gentleman visitor ventured upon the indiscreet query: 'Now, what age are you my dear friend?' addressing his remarks to Mlle. X., who certainly can no longer be considered in her first youth. 'What a question, indeed!' said the lady; 'how can that possibly interest you?' 'Simply curiosity,' responded the visitor. 'Well, then, I will be frank with you. Really I do not know. One counts one's money, one's jewels and one's deeds of value, because it may happen that they could be lost or stolen, but as I am absolutely certain that nobody will take a year from my age, and that I shall never lose one, why, where is the need of counting?'—London Era.

The highest mine in the United States, and probably in the world, is the Present Help, situated on Mount Lincoln, in the main range of the Rocky Mountains, in Park county, Colorado. According to Professor Hayden, Mount Lincoln has an altitude of 14,297 feet. The Present Help boarding house, built alongside of the entrance to the main drift, is about 200 yards away from the extreme summit of the mountain and 140 feet lower down. This leaves it 14,157 feet above the sea level, and it is undoubtedly the highest inhabited house in the world.

Proper English.

O why shall we say for catched, caught,
As grammarians some say we ought?
Let us see
How things be
When this kind of teaching is taught.

The egg isn't hatched, it is haught;
My breeches aren't patched, they are paught;
John and Jane are not matched, they are maught;
My door isn't latched, it is laught;
The pie wasn't snatched, it was snaught;
The cat never scratched, but she scraught;
The roof wasn't thatched, it was thaught.

If English must this way be wrought,
It soon will be natched—that is naught.

MORAL COURAGE.

In every school the difference is clearly marked between the boy who has moral courage, and the boy who is mere pulp. The one knows how to say 'No.' The other is so afraid of being thought 'verdant' that he soon kills everything pure and fresh and manly in his character, and dries up into a premature hardness of heart.

Five lads were gathered in a room at a boarding-school, and four of them engaged in a game of cards, which was expressly forbidden by the rules. One of the players was called out. The three said to the quiet lad who was busy at something else,—

'Come take a hand with us. It is too bad to have the game broken up.'

'I do not know one card from another.'

'That makes no difference,' exclaimed the players. 'We'll show you how. Come along.'

Now that was a turning point in that lad's life. He nobly said,—

'My father does not wish me to play cards, and I will not disobey him.'

That sentence settled the matter and settled his position among his associates, He was the boy who could say 'No,' and henceforth his victories were made easy and sure. I well remember the pressure brought to bear in a college upon every young man to join in a wine drink or to take a hand in some contraband amusement. Some timber got well seasoned. Some of the other sort got well rotted through with sensuality and vice. The Nehemiahs at college have been Nehemiahs ever since. The boy was father of the man.—Band of Hope.

An aged lady, who had buried three husbands during her lifetime, finally died in a New York town, and her last request was that her mortal remains might repose beside those of her first husband. An investigation showed that No. 1, who had been thrice married, was peacefully resting between his two wives, whereupon resort was had to No. 2. Singularly enough, his dust was found to occupy a precisely similar position. Only one chance now remained, and it was with some uneasiness that the mourners visited the grave of No. 3. But the last of the trio had been more considerate. Upon his right lay his first wife, but upon his left was a vacant space, and there a mound was quickly raised above the earthly tabernacle of his second and last consort.

A collector of antique furnitue was hunting through the auction shops, the other day, for a 'signal service bureau.'

THE CHILDREN'S WATCHES.

Yesterday, an old man entered a Little Rock store, and taking from his pocket an old buckskin pouch, he emptied two coins on the counter, and then, after regarding the silver for a few moments, said: —

"Mister, I want to buy some goods to make a dress."

"That money is mutilated, old gentleman. This twenty-five cent piece has notches filed in it, and this fifty cent piece has been punched. You see, they have been abused. I can't take them."

"Abused?" said the old man. "Abused?" and he took up the fifty cent piece and looked at it tenderly. "And you won't take it on account of the holes? Heaven grant that I did not have to offer it to you. Years ago, when my first child was a little girl, I punched a hole in this coin and strung it around her neck. It was her constant plaything. At night when she went to bed we'd take it off, but early at morning she would call for her watch. When our John—you didn't know John, did you? No? Well, he used to come to town a good deal."

"Where is he now?" asked the merchant, not knowing what to say, but desiring to show appreciation of the old man's story.

"He was killed in the war. I say that when John was a little boy I strung this quarter around his neck. One day, his watch got out of fix, he said, and he filed these notches in it. He and his sister Mary—that was the girl's name—used to play in the yard and compare their watches to see if they were right. Sometimes, John wouldn't like it because Mary's watch was bigger than his, but she would explain that she was bigger than him and ought to have a bigger watch. The children grew up, but as they had always lived in the woods they were not ashamed to wear their watches. When a young man came to see Mary once, she forgetfully looked at her fifty cents. 'What are you doing?' asked the young man; and when she told him she was looking at her watch, he took it as a hint and went home. After this she did not wear her watch in company. Well, Mary and the young man married. John went off in the army and got killed. Mary's husband died, and about two years ago Mary was taken sick. When her mother and I reached the house, she was dying. Calling me to her bed, she said, 'Papa, lean over'. I leaned over, and taking something from under her pillow, she put it around my neck and said, 'Papa, take care of my watch.'" The old man looked at the merchant. The eyes of both were moist. "Do you see that boy out there on the wagon?" he said. "Well, that is Mary's child. I wouldn't part with this money, but my old wife, who always loved me, died this morning; and I have come to buy her a shroud." When the old man went out, he carried a bundle in one hand and the "watches" in the other.—Little Rock Gazette.

A ROMANCE IN A NUTSHELL.

He was introduced to her at a ball; she danced with him and forgot him.

She met him again at a reception, was re-introduced, and remembered she had seen him before. Where? She knew not. Yet for some minutes his arm had been around her slender waist.

At the reception she talked with him, and found him dull. She looked at him. He might be called handsome, but was awkward. When he sat down he was prone to sprawl. He stood with his head forward, and stumbled ungracefully in his walk. She flushed with annoyance, left him, and went into the conservatory with a man more to her taste.

She found him one evening at the house of a friend. She conversed easily on topics of general interest. He sat in a chair too low for him, and his feet were painfully apparent. She disdainfully turned her shoulder toward him. Presently she rose to go, and dropped her handkerchief. He bent lightly forward and caught it up, almost before it touched the carpet. As an intimate friend at the house, he prepared to see her home. He arranged her cloak with eager deference, and she smiled; he trampled on her skirt as she passed out of the door, and she frowned.

They arrived at her gate; he pushed it open, took off his hat, and almost ran away.

One day she was coming home from a shopping expedition with a small parcel in her hand. He came up with her, bowed awkwardly, blushed, and asked if he might take her parcel. He did not say much, but listened in adoring silence. When he left her she laughed, and said he was intolerably stupid, yet not a bore.

Pretty soon he began to call often, and attended her to the opera and theatre when she would permit him. He was always near her, and anxious to be of service. He was manly, and among men a favorite. He rode well but danced indifferently. The other girls laughed at him, but he did not heed it. She danced perfectly, was talkative, daring and impulsive.

She snubbed him, and shook him off for more accomplished men.

He finally said he loved her. She laughed, said 'Impossible,' tormented him, neglected him, refused more eligible suitors, and finally married him and adored him for all time.

Of such is the nature of women.

Carrie, five, when asked to do something which she does not like, replies: 'Well mamma, if I'd only known what kind of a world this was, I'd never have come here?' Another naughty day, her mother says: 'What does make you do so?' She replies: 'Why, mamma! I guess I must have left all my good up in heaven, but the angels will keep it for me, and I'll get it again some time, and then you will see what a nice girl I'll be.'

A Hartford man went to a lawyer for advice. After receiving the retaining fee the lawyer said; 'State your case.' 'Well, sir,' replied the client, 'a man told me to go to h—l and I want your advice.' The attorney took down a volume of the Connecticut statutes, and after turning over a few leaves, answered: 'Don't you do it. The law doesn't compel you.'

A party of vegetarians who were boarding at a water cure establishment, while taking a walk in the fields, were attacked by a bull, which chased them furiously out of his pasture. 'That's your gratitude is it, you hateful thing?' exclaimed one of the ladies, panting with fright and fatigue. 'After this I'll eat beef three times a day.'

It is wise and well to look on the cloud of sorrow as though we expected it to turn into a rainbow.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1882.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR sent a message to Congress, Thursday, calling attention to the lawlessness prevailing in Arizona, and asking authority to use some of the army to enforce the laws there.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, the poet-philosopher, and one of the greatest thinkers of the age, died of pneumonia at his Concord home Thursday evening, at the age of 79 years, after a short illness.

THE Connecticut Legislature finished up its business Wednesday, and adjourned sine die. Our Massachusetts law-makers are still jogging along at a rate which promises to keep them at the Hub well along into the summer.

THE stockholders of the Boston & Albany Railroad voted on Wednesday, at their adjourned meeting, to accept the act authorizing the purchase of the State stock, by a vote of 56,773 to 32,760. There was no discussion, and the result is as expected. The State will now give up its stock, at $160 per share, in exchange for the company's bonds, payable in 20 years from April 1, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent.

A STATEMENT was published by Dr. Boynton on Wednesday, certified by Mrs. Garfield, in which he says that on or about August 8, last, President Garfield stated that Dr. Baxter had for many years been his physician, that he still considered him as such, and had no knowledge of ever placing himself under the care of Dr. Bliss, or that the latter had ever spoken a word with him upon the subject. Dr. Bliss stated at the Guiteau trial that the President requested him to take charge of his case, on the morning after the shooting.

ONE Adolph Razin, a former Mormon, has published a sworn statement that in March, 1855, George Q. Cannon, the Mormon delegate just expelled from Congress, endeavored to induce him to murder A. W. Babbitt, then secretary of the territory of Utah, for offenses against the church, and in accordance with their doctrine of blood atonement. Several affidavits are also published to show that Razin is a man of veracity and of good repute. Babbitt was assassinated the next year, and Razin believes it was done at the instigation of Cannon.

INDIAN massacres have begun again. The town of Gualleysville, in Arizona, is reported to have been burned and completely destroyed by the Apaches on Tuesday, and 35 persons killed. Several other massacres are also reported, and the number of whites killed will probably exceed 75. A mass meeting of citizens Tuesday night at Tucson, Ariz., sent a bitter message to the President and Congress, intimating that if some of the money spent in the military display at Fortress Monroe were expended instead in protecting the western pioneers, it would be better.

EVEN Scoville cannot stand Guiteau's abuse any longer, and he has retired from his case, partly because he could not afford to appear further, and partly because of Guiteau's base ingratitude. The idea of "base ingratitude" in a lunatic, as Scoville has professed to believe Guiteau to be! The hearing of the exceptions in the assassin's case is set down for May 8, when Charles Reed will appear for Guiteau. Mrs. Scoville proposes to circulate petitions to the President for the pardon of her brother, and to lecture in his behalf through the West. It is a relief to think that she will not lecture in this section.

THE House at Boston on Tuesday passed the bill appropriating $250,000 for double-tracking the Hoosac Tunnel line. During the debate Representative Bowerman of Pittsfield presented some interesting figures, showing that the State has appropriated for the tunnel, including this year's contribution, over $4,000,000 since it was supposed to have been completed. He showed that the State was under no sort of obligation to furnish the Fitchburg road with a double track, under the present contract, which runs to 1887, and that 67 per cent of our State tax is on account of this tunnel. But arguments were of no avail. The bill was passed to be engrossed, and we suppose the State will go on throwing its money into this hole as long as it is asked for—or certainly until the people are awakened to the folly of further waste in this direction.

Now that it seems to be settled that Gov. Long will not take another term, there is considerable interest manifested in some quarters in picking out a successor for him. Congressmen Crapo of the Cape district and Rice of Worcester, and President Bishop of the Senate, are among the leading names "mentioned," while some of the Berkshire papers even venture to bring out Lieut. Gov. Weston as a suitable man for the place. Speaker Noyes has lost whatever chance he had, by his dodging on the liquor bill. None of the candidates named excite a great deal of enthusiasm—in fact, it is too early for that—and Gov. Long may yet be induced to take another term, as we wish he might. At any rate, it is a good while to November, and there is time enough before then to bring out quantities of additional candidates. Congressmen Rice has just announced that he is not a candidate for gubernatorial honors.

Gen. William L. Burt, a native of Wilbraham, former law partner of John A. Andrew, and ex-postmaster at Boston, died at Saratoga, N. Y., last week Friday, of paralysis. Of late he has been engaged in pushing the Boston, Hoosac Tunnel and Western Railroad line, of which he was projector and president, and his death was doubtless hastened by his untiring work in that direction.

On Thursday Daniel O'Brien, drunk, paid $5.65, and yesterday Thomas Casey, for disturbing the peace, paid $14.05.

H. P. Holden has a curiosity in the egg line. In a lot of eggs brought to his store the other day was found one on the side of which, in plain raised letters in the shell, is the word "wo," with another indistinct letter following, which may be taken for an "e." Have we a hen prophet in our midst, which is taking this method of announcing some dire calamity? Let some eggspert oracle eggsplain this eggstraordinary eggsploit.

In behalf of the many worthy citizens in town who are opposed to the principle of licensing the sale of liquor, and who view with sorrow and pain the deplorable results of the traffic on every hand, we would urge the selectmen to help on the well being and good order of the town by sharply restricting the number of licenses to be issued for the coming year. Free rum is little worse than free license, even if the latter is paid for.

One of Palmer's pressing needs is larger and better post office accommodations. The present office is small and inconvenient, both for the public and for the work of the office. There ought to be at least double the amount of room afforded by the existing arrangement, with new boxes and more of them, and with room enough in front of them so that the presence of a dozen people at once would not necessitate the crowding and squeezing now unavoidable. Some of the towns about us are much better off in this respect than we are.

"Mrs. Partington" had a house full at Wales Hall Thursday evening, and entertained her auditors in a thoroughly satisfactory manner, judging from the almost constant "laughture" which pervaded the hall. The character of "Ike" was overdrawn; he was what Artemas Ward would have called a little "2 mutch"; but the other parts were exceedingly well taken, and as a piece of mirth-provoking nonsense the play is unquestionably a success. The total receipts of the evening were about $175, and the expenses for the dramatic club nearly as much.

Only three or four anti-license men attended the hearing before the selectmen last Monday, but a number of applicants for licenses were on hand, and a plea was made for them by an attorney. The board adjourned for one week, and will be at the town house again next Monday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, to hear further arguments on the license question. It is to be hoped that the many who are opposed to granting licenses in a wholesale manner will make known their wishes at that time, and not be content with having merely voted "no" at the annual town meeting.

The new time table on the Boston & Albany Railroad goes into effect next Monday, when the 11.02 a. m. express west will be changed to 11. 04. The new afternoon express will leave Palmer at 5.34, the accommodation at 5.57, and the fast New York express at 6.37. The only change in trains going east is in the evening fast express, which will leave at 8.39. On the Ware River road Sedgwick's afternoon "flyer" from Winchendon will come through 35 minutes quicker than at present, leaving there at 2 instead of 1.30, and arriving here at 5.30, five minutes earlier than now. The last train north will leave at 6.40 instead of 6.20.

The building lots on the north side of Knox street are now nearly all taken, there being only two at present which have not been bargained for. Beginning at Main street, the first lot, on the corner, awaits a purchaser, the next one being owned by J. A. Hawkes, and the next by Frank Ruggles, this one being on the lower corner of Highland Avenue extension. Postmaster Knox owns the next corner lot, and above him Wallace Chilson and W. C. Hitchcock have just bought lots. It was expected that two or three new houses would go up on the street this season, but it is now probable that Postmaster Knox's will be the only house to be started this year.

The hills at the north end of the village look bare and desolate enough since the wood has been cut off, and the handsome foliage of the trees in past seasons will be sadly missed this summer. The foliage on the surrounding hills has been one of the chief natural charms of our village in the past, and every tree that is cut down on them is a real loss to the place. It will take many years to make good the losses of this kind already experienced, if the work is left to nature alone, but there is a capital chance to cover the nakedness of the hills by an intelligent system of tree planting, a work which would pay steadily increasing dividends year by year, in the way of making our surroundings both beautiful and comfortable.

The annual meeting of the Congregational parish Thursday afternoon resulted in the election of the following officers: Moderator, H. C. Strong; clerk, David Knox; treasurer and collector, S. H. Hellyar; parish committee, J. K. Warren, J. B. Shaw, J. W. Shanks; committee on pulpit supply, O. P. Allen, H. R. Stoughton, C. A. Brown. Appropriations: Pulpit supply, $1500; music, $300; fuel and incidentals, $500. A new departure in the ordinary routine of the proceedings occurred when a dozen leading ladies of the society presented themselves for membership in the parish. It seemed to be something of a surprise, though evidently not a disagreeable one, for they were voted in unanimously. The pews in the church will be rented next Monday evening.

Ryan's menagerie and circus, which is to exhibit in Palmer next week Saturday, May 6, does not claim to be the biggest show on earth, but does claim to give as good an exhibition as can be found under any tent. Everything is new, clean and fresh. The menagerie contains in a separate tent a choice collection of performing tigers, lions, leopards and panthers, manipulated by Charles White, and the ring exercises of the big-eared African elephant Romeo, and the trained steers Prince and Duke, are of no small interest. In the circus department James Robinson, the famous bareback rider, stands supreme. It is said of him that 'he is to the arena what Booth is to the drama, Patti to the opera, or Emerson to minstrelsy, the best, greatest and most conspicuous example of his great art, the champion unquestioned and the inventor, parent and daring performer alone of his own great and inimitable specialties." The remainder of the company are selected from the best artists, and it is the aim of the manager to make this, as a whole, the most satisfactory exhibition on the road, and as it is the first show of the season, it will of course call out a very full attendance.

BONDSVILLE.

An intimation that there is a case of small-pox in Thorndike has startled our usually quiet village, and the demand for virus must be quite encouraging to the dealers, as well as our local doctors.

Rev. A. C. Manson, who has had the pastorate of the M. E. church in this village for the past three years, has removed to Topsfield. He has the best wishes of the many friends he has made in this place. His place will be supplied by Rev. G. H. Clarke, of Topsfield, who has removed here, and will begin his labors next Sunday.

The license question is just now agitating the public mind, and petitions and counter petitions are circulating freely. There seems to be a strong desire with certain parties to oppose the granting of a license to the new hotel over the river. The proprietors come well recommended for integrity and square dealing, and the prejudice seems to be simply a difference of nationality, which ought not to affect their petition for a license, as they intend to keep a strictly first-class house.

THORNDIKE.

The Thorndike Co. are building a barn on the site of the one recently burned.

The license question is causing considerable discussion at present, and it is not difficult to see how the matter is held by our representative citizens.

The school in the Whiting district is closed because of the prevalence of chicken pox among the children. All the schools in and about the village are badly disturbed by the same disease.

Repairs are being made on Commercial street, which ought to reach several useless stons posts not calculated to increase human happiness. May this contagion spread till some other streets are likewise affected.

There has been great excitement in this community for a few days over the discovery of two cases of small-pox of a virulent type in the Thorndike Company's boarding house. According to the physician's report there are but two cases, and they not as severe as was first reported. There have been the wildest rumors and the most rediculous exaggerations in regard to the extent and character of the disease, which facts do not justify. The authorities have carefully quarantined the building, and placed it in charge of a sentinel. The great prevalence of the chicken pox among children has doubtless added somewhat to the "scare."

Eight applications have been sent in to the selectmen of this place from various classes for liquor licenses. It is hoped some may be disappointed, as there seems to be plenty of places where the ardent is to be found, even without a license. J. A. Barry, proprietor of the Belcher House, was complained of the past week for illegal selling, but it is rumored that the matter has been hushed up in some way, this making the third offense in one year against him.

The Lyceum Dramatic Club's presentation of 'Eily O'Connor' at Central Hall last week Friday evening drew out a crowded house, and the club netted some $60 from the entertainment.

E. F. Willis, the clothier, has been confined with illness for some days past, and is as yet unable to be out; but the services of Cooper Stone have been secured, and everybody knows that "Coop" will try his level best to give the same good bargains that have heretofore characterized the Monson clothing house.

Gilbert Edson has purchased one of the barns on the late Hiram Newton homestead, and moved it to his lot on Squier avenue. The removal of the barn makes one more betterment on Main street, and it has been suggested and heartily approved by a number of citizens that if all the buildings on the premises were removed there would be a splendid place for a park, with a good site for a town house in the rear, and soldiers' monument in the front. Won't some of our public spirited citizens take hold of this project, and thus immortalize their names for the present as well as future generations?

About one o'clock Monday morning fire was discovered at the Boyle place, about two miles south of the village. The buildings were totally destroyed. Insured for $1400. The place, with all the buildings, and about 100 acres of land, was bought at auction a few weeks ago by B. F. Davis for $1225.

The appointed officers will be announced at the installation next Monday evening, when lodges from Greenwich and Palmer will be present and a collation served.

The farm house of James W. Brakenridge was entirely destroyed by fire Thursday afternoon, the fire probably taking in the roof from the chimney. The furniture was mostly saved. He had a large amount of valuable papers, bank books, etc., that were all saved and sent by special messenger to the Ware National Bank for safe keeping. The house was a good one, and the loss is probably not far from $2500; insured for $1200. The engine company were promptly on hand and did good service, although they had but just retured their apparatus to the house after the Water street fire.

Miss Lizzie Jewett of Norwich, Ct., daughter of the late Dr. Charles Jewett, the famous temperance agitator, refused to open the door for a tramp last Sunday morning, when the fellow broke through and entered a window, and twisted a table cloth about her head as she was trying to escape. She fell in a swoon, and the tramp went to the pantry, made a comfortable lunch, and then departed. Miss Jewett remained unconscious until the family returned from church, forty minutes later.

Buffalo, N. Y., has a bad case of bank wrecking, unparalleled, probably, in the rapidity with which the work has been done. R. P. Lee, vice president of the First National Bank of that city, became manager of the institution eight months ago, and president in January, and has managed to loan money so recklessly as to lose the whole capital and surplus of the bank, and $350,000 besides.

Five men, heavily armed, derailed a train on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, near Rincon, N. M., the other day, for the purpose of robbing the express car of $200,000 in silver from Arizona mines for New York; but they got into the baggage car instead of the express car, by mistake, giving the passengers time to rally and drive them off. The fireman was killed.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. BY UNIVERSAL ACCORD

Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the best of all purgatives for family use. They are the product of long, laborious, and successful chemical investigation, and their extensive use, by physicians in practice, and by all civilized nations, proves them the best and most effectual purgative pill that science can devise. Being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use, and being sugar coated they are pleasant to take. In intrinsic value and curative powers no other pills can be compared with them; and every person, knowing their virtues, will employ them, when needed. They keep the system in perfect order, and maintain in healthy action the whole machinery of life. Mild, searching and effectual, they are especially adapted to the needs of the digestive apparatus, derangements of which they prevent and cure, if timely taken. They are the best and safest physic to employ for children and weakened constitutions, where a mild but effectual cathartic is required.

For sale by all druggists. 4

Longfellow's First Poem.

At nine years of age the poet Longfellow's teacher gave him his slate and told him to go out behind the schoolhouse and "write something." He said he would there find something to write about. "You can tell what it is, what it is for, and what will be done with it." He chanced to go behind Mr. Finney's barn that was close by. In a short time Henry returned with this, his first poem:

Mr. Finney had a turnip,
And it grew, and it grew,
And it grew behind the barn,
And the turnip did no harm.

And it grew, and it grew,
Till it could grow no taller,
Then Mr. Finney took it up,
And put it in the cellar.

There it lay, there it lay,
Till it began to rot,
Then his daughter Susie washed it,
And she put it in the pot.

Then she boiled it, and boiled it,
As long as she was able,
Then his daughter Lizzie took it up,
And she put it on the table.

Mr. Finney and his wife,
They both sat down to sup,
And they ate, and they ate,
Till they ate the turnip up.

The Americus (Ga.) Republican tells of a cat which charmed a mocking bird and was in turn charmed by the songster's notes. When first observed the bird was on the ground, about three feet from the cat, singing a thrilling, triumphant melody, that held its enemy entranced. The bird had come under the mesmeric influence of the cat and could not get away, and the cat, charmed by the melody of the bird, could not eat it. Several times it would crouch, give its tail a switching motion and prepare to spring, but the bird would approach, warbling in a milder strain, and puss would rub her head against it, purring in that manner so peculiar to these animals when pleased. An attempt was made to frighten the bird away, but the cat caught it in her mouth, ran off a little way, put it upon the ground, and let the little creature sing. The cat was then taken away and the bird driven off, but the cat at once started in pursuit, with what success is not known.

Thirty years ago John Potts, village blacksmith at Brooklyn, Penn., took into his family a homeless young girl, loved, cared for and educated her. For many years he has not known where she was; but a few days ago Mrs. James Rutledge, the wife of a Pittsburg millionaire, made herself known to him as the waif of thirty years ago, took him to her home and gave him $50,000 in United States bonds.

Not content with their past experiences, the two men who crossed the Atlantic in the dory Little Western now propose to vie with each other in rowing from New York to some port in England. One of them talks of making the trip in a boat 12 feet long, while his companion offers to row over in one 9 feet long.

We must not be surprised to hear of a paper furniture factory starting into existence before long. Paper can now be made of strong fibres and compressed into a substance so hard that only a diamond can scratch it. A foreign journal says that wood will be superseded by paper.

WHAT HAPPENED TO

MR. JOSEPH BEACH.

STONE IN THE KIDNEY EXPELLED AFTER USING DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" ABOUT TWO WEEKS.

One of the most remarkable cases that has ever been brought to the notice of the public is that of Mr. J. S. Beach, of Stone Bridge, Ulster Co., N. Y. Mr. Beach had suffered since October 18th, 1874, from the presence of Calculus or Stone in the right Kidney. No less than seven physicians were employed at different times, to whom Mr. Beach paid hundreds of dollars for medical treatment, with only temporary relief from his agony.

By the urgent solicitations of his friends he was induced to try Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy"—experienced a marked improvement from the first day he began to use the medicine; on the 15th day of September he voided a stone as large as could be passed through the natural channel.

Mr. Beach concludes a long letter to Dr. Kennedy by saying: "It will always afford me pleasure to recommend the "Favorite Remedy" to those who may be suffering from difficulties of the kidneys and bladder, or any disorders arising from an impure state of the blood." The "Favorite Remedy" is sold by all druggists. The Doctor's only address is Rondout, New York. 4w4

WHEAT BITTERS.

THE BEST AND THE RICHEST

BLOOD, BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

CAREFULLY PREPARED,

ACCEPTABLE & RELIABLE

The Phosphates of the Wheat are its most valuble food property, and are, when properly prepared, the most acceptable nutriment with which to build up the system.

The Blood, Brain and Nerves are the forces which bear the strain of every day work and life, and in order to save sickness it is wise to BUILD FOR HEALTH.

Wheat Bitters are prepared, not by fermentation, but by solution, and are richest in the Phosphates, while the starch and impure matter are eliminated. These make in themselves a basis, to which is added the best and choicest medicinal qualities, necessary to make it a tonic and bitter. It is at once healthful, pleasant to the taste and must not be confounded with the thousand and one cheap alcoholic bitters which are sold as cure-alls. Medicine is doubly effective when used with food, so as to nourish while it corrects.

A SPRING DEFENCE

HOW TO REPEL THE ASSAULTS OF ILL HEALTH—DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" MEANS SOMETHING FOR YOU.

The months of March, April and May are the three successive arches of a bridge which connect the season of ice and sleet with that of leaves and roses. No less in respect of health than of outward natural phenomenon is this true. Spring is a trying season for invalids, and particularly for those who either suffer, or are liable to suffer, from Biliousness, Kidney Complaints and Constipation of the Bowels, and for women who are chronically subject to any of the long catalogue of physical ailments to which their delicate sex is heir. Indications of disease in Spring should be heeded at once. A fatal attack may easily result from neglect or a disordered condition of the bowels. The ounce of prevention may be had where tons of cure—or attempted cure—may be unavailing. Are you vexed or troubled in Spring with indigestion, torpid liver, want of appetite, constipation, or a feverish state of the skin? If so, take without an hour's unnecessary delay, Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." No medicine is so harmless and yet so quick and positive in its action. It is Nature's own idea, condensed and made tangible by human skill. Do not leave home when going upon a journey without a bottle in your valise. You cannot possibly put one dollar in any other shape where it can render you so essential service. The "Favorite Remedy" is almost instantaneous in its action, but does not tear you to pieces with its violence nor nauseate you with disgust. It frees the liver from bile and sets the machinery of your body into normal and healthy operation. Remember: Dr. D. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. Ask your druggist for it and take nothing else. Price One Dollar a bottle. 4w2

CUTICURA,

THE NEW BLOOD PURIFIER RESOLVENT.

I will now state that I made a miraculous cure of one of the worst cases of skin disease known. The patient is a man forty years old; had suffered fifteen years. His eyes, scalp and nearly his whole body presented a frightful appearance. Had had the attention of twelve different physicians, who prescribed the best remedies known to the profession, such as iodide potassium, arsenic, corrosive sublimate, sarsaparilla, etc. Had paid $500 for medical treatment with but little relief. I prevailed upon him to use the CUTICURA RESOLVENT internally, and the CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally. He did so, and was completely cured. The skin on his head, face, and many other parts of his body, which presented a most loathsome appearance, is now as soft and smooth as an infant's, with no scar or trace of the disease left behind. He has now been cured twelve months.

Reported by
F. H. BROWN, Esq., Barnwell, S. C.

SCROFULA SORE.

Rev. Dr. ——, in detailing his experience with the CUTICURA REMEDIES said that through Divine Providence one of his parishoners was cured of a scrofulous sore, which was slowly draining away his life, by the CUTICURA RESOLVENT internally, and CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally. The poison that had fed the disease was completely driven out.

ECZEMA.

Sixteen months since an eruption broke out on my leg and both feet, which turned out to be Eczema, and caused me great pain and annoyance. I tried various remedies with no good results, until I used the CUTICURA RESOLVENT internally and CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally, which entirely cured me so that my skin is as smooth and natural as ever.

LEN. M. FRAILEY, 64 South St., Baltimore.

CUTICURA.

The Cuticura treatment, for the cure of Skin, Scalp and Blood diseases, consists in the internal use of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, the new blood purifier, and the external use of CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP, the great skin cures. Price of CUTICURA, small boxes, 50c.; large boxes, $1.00. CUTICURA RESOLVENT, $1.00 per bottle. CUTICURA SOAP, 25c.; CUTICURA SHAVING SOAP, 15c.

Off to the Poor-House.

"I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread."(?)—PSALMS 37:25.

They have carried me off to the poor-house,
Off to the poor-house to die,
Though they promised to see me supported,
And took my goods to apply;
All dead were my dearly loved kindred,
To whom but the church could I fly?
Yet they carried me off to the poor-house,
Off to the poor-house to die.

I'm forsaken by those whom I trusted;
I thought they were kind and true;
And though aged and feeble and childish,
Supposed they would see me through.
O, forgive them, my Father! forgive them!
The deed they cannot deny,
How they carried me off to the poor-house,
Off to the poor-house to die.

I have met them for years at the table
Of a common, dying Lord;
And together our prayers ascended
As the sacred wine was poured.
They've forgotten, as now they assemble
Where ease and luxury vie,
That they carried me off to the poor-house,
Off to the poor-house to die.

I have lived a long life—to my sorrow,
My money is gone, they cry,
I would end it most gladly to-morrow
To please them on whom I rely.
But alas! not a hope can I borrow
For suicides up in the sky;
So I'm lingering here at the poor-house,
Lingering only to die.

I complain not of him who o'ersees me,
"He manages well," they say;
But he calls no physician to ease me,
Not e'en a parson to pray.
Would orders that wear the compass and square
Suffer a brother to lie
With the foolish and crippled and crazy,
Off in the poor-house, to die?

O, my Savior! once human and homeless,
Who wast by thine own betrayed,
There is no one to sweeten my sorrows,
No one to come to my aid.
Take me out of this pitiless prison,
Up to my mansion on high;
For I am waiting here in the poor-house,
Waiting and longing—to die. B.

A SUMMER'S ROMANCE.

An idle boat, with idle oars, floating idly down with the current of a calm, smooth lake, on whose placid breast the moonbeams played at will.

Such the picture, had one been near spectator to the mimic scene; but to the two actors, surroundings were lost sight of—they thought only of themselves.

Mocking the moon-rays, when they glanced upward they could see on the bank above them the twinkling lights of the villa, and hear the merry voices and gay laughter of the group from which they had escaped. Arch smiles had passed between its members as they had seen Della Allison and Harry Hunter stroll off, arm in arm, to where the little boat was moored.

The women had almost ceased to be jealous of Della, or to ask where lay her charm. She exercised her fascination even among them as among men, and they bowed before her—first from necessity and then from choice.

But, though her victims were countless, she was twenty-three, and Della Allison still. However, this time she had encountered a foeman worthy of her steel.

What she was among men, Harry Hunter was among women. Therefore, seeing these two brought beneath the same roof, and thrown into daily intercourse, rumor was rife, and speculation awaited the results with bated breath. Meantime the little boat floated calmly on the quiet surface of the lake.

"Miss Allison!"

It was the first word either had spoken in full five minutes.

She glanced up at the speaker. The white lace thrown carelessly upon her dark hair, out from which peered the beautiful, pale face, lent her some of the moon's mystic charm; but meeting the magnetic gaze of the dark, earnest eyes bent upon her, hers fell for an instant; then, as though ashamed of the momentary weakness, again shot a questioning look into Mr. Hunter's face.

"Miss Allison," he repeated, slowly, "did you know that we were in danger?"

"In danger?"

Her cheek grew a shade paler. She glanced up at the blue vault where sailed so majestically the Goddess of Night—down into the dark depths of the water, only to see Luna's brilliancy reflected there—around, about her. Not a leaflet stirred.

"No," he said, in answer to her look—"Not from any of these. The moon, the wind, the water, all are our friends to-night. We are in danger from each other."

Oh, how she prayed the moon might fail to make apparent the instant flushing of hot blood to her cheek! She felt it glow like a warm, crimson rose, even while she raised her little head, almost defiantly, as though to hurl a challenge at his audacity. Men had made love to her in many forms, but always as suppliants. This man dared suppose her in equal danger with himself!

"You deal in enigmas, Mr. Hunter," she returned, haughtily. "I am accustomed to plain speech."

"Rather say that plain speech to you is an unknown tongue, and that I am the first man who has dared speak frankly. Would you have me more open still? You shall have your wish. A week longer under the same roof with you, a week more of exposure to your maddening fascinations, and my ship would go to wreck and ruin on the bar; unless"—he leaned nearer, his voice grew softer, more full of tender feeling, and his hand fell on hers very lightly, but with caressing grace—"unless, Della, you would let it float your pennon and guide it into the safe harbor of your love."

She had been wooed many times, in many climes, by many men, but naught had ever moved her as this wooing, on this moonlight night in July. Yet this man dared tell her that in another week this might come to pass.

Others had sworn to go from her presence to put an end to the existence she had rendered miserable; or had vowed that henceforth woman's smile would be gall and wormwood; or pleaded that she had shorn their manhood of its strength, and rendered their life a burden. This one did none of these things. While his strength yet was his, he saw and met the danger.

"A week hence," she said to herself, bitterly, "and the flame might singe him. Now his wings are all unscorched. He does not say, 'I love you!' He says 'In time I might love you;'" Was he thus to win so easy a victory? Not so.

"Let us go home," she interrupted, with a little shiver. "It is growing chill."

"Della, is this my answer?"

"Your answer?" with an assumption of surprise. "I was not aware of any question."

"You shall not have even this excuse. Will you be my wife?" His voice was stern now—stern to harshness—and his grasp tightened on her hand.

"You hurt me, Mr. Hunter," she complained, petulantly, making an effort to withdraw her finger.

Instantly he released her.

"I see that I have hurt you," he returned, courteously, and took up the idle oars. "Pardon me," he continued; "I will not ever again."

A few bold strokes, and the boat's keel grated on the shore. Ten minutes later, and the two reappeared in their hostess' tastefully appointed salon. A group of men instantly gathered about Miss Allison. Never had her laugh rung out more clearly, her gay sallies of wit and repartee been more sparkling; but ever, from time to time, her eye roved restlessly to the open window, where, on the parterre beyond, shone the red light from a man's cigar. It was still there, still gleaming, when she had gone up to her own room. She crossed to the window to pull down the shade, but stood a minute, fascinated, motionless.

"After to-night he will forget me," she murmured, sadly. "And I—I shall remember him forever!"

Then, as though a sudden truth had burst upon her, she drew down the shade—to throw herself, with quick, impetuous motion, prone upon the couch, and weep the first heart-tears she had ever shed.

"The drama is ended—Miss Allison has refused him!" This was the general verdict when, twenty-four hours later, Harry Hunter bade his hostess adieu, and withdrew to town on plea of sudden business. Of course the news reached Della's ears.

"I have not refused him," she said, aloud. "Not even that satisfaction is mine," she added to herself—"Nor ever will be! It was only 'the might have been!'"

He was not the man, she knew full well, to plunge desperately into flirtation, or associate his name at once with another woman's, or to retire later or rise earlier, or in any way disturb the even tenor of his way. The difference between them was only this—his wound was healing, perhaps already healed, but he would bear its scar to the grave; hers was a festering sore, which hurt the more that she had let the physician who might work its cure pass her by.

The summer waned to its close. Nature had lent autumn its wondrous paint box and magic brush, and mountain and hillside were converted thereby into glorious beauty. Then came King Frost, first to heighten by his touch, then to kill, followed by winter's lagging footsteps, mercifully bearing the exquisite white shroud of snow to cover up all signs of devastation and decay.

The season in the gay world was at its height. Occasionally, murmurs among the debutantes for its honors arose the fact that, Miss Allison's fourth winter, her former successes paled in its more effulgent light. She and Harry Hunter constantly met. She almost wished he might avoid her; but at their first chance encounter he had approached with an outstretched hand.

"How charming you are looking, Miss Allison!" he had said. And all in vain she had watched for a tremor in his tone, or a shade of embarrassment in his manner.

"Only a week between him and shipwreck!" she thought, bitterly. "Ah, he has sailed so far from the fatal rock, that doubtless he would now laugh at his supposed danger; and I—I was weak and vain enough to think he stood upon the precipice's brink!"

The new year had come, and one evening Della stood alone in her father's drawing room, looking out at the fast gathering darkness, when through its sombre shade she saw a figure pass and mount the steps.

"A visitor!" she uttered, wearily; then waited the inevitable announcement she knew must follow. But spite of her every effort, she started when the servant, throwing open the door, uttered Mr. Hunter's name. Oh, how glad she was that the rooms were not yet lighted as she went forward to receive him!

"May I welcome you in darkness?" she questioned.

"As you will," he answered. "I have but a few moments to stay. I am come to bid you good-by, and to ask you to wish me Bon voyage."

"Bon voyage! You are going abroad?"

"Yes; I sail on Wednesday. I hesitated about calling, but my desire to see you led me to believe you would pardon my audacity in supposing my going a question of enough moment to make it worthy a special call."

"My friends are always welcome, Mr. Hunter. I did not suppose it necessary you should hear that repeated now."

"Nor is it. It was only morbid fancy on my part which induced me to question it. I shall come back, I trust, with my mind clearer. At least I shall be some years older. When I return I presume I shall look for Miss Allison in vain, until I find her in some matron equally charming. I cannot imagine her quite staid and portly."

So he could speak thus lightly of her becoming the wife of another man! And he was going away; she might never again hear his voice nor see his face. It was too cruel! He and Fate were too strong for her. The tears gathered in the gray eyes, but the darkness hid them.

He rattled on—she had no need to speak. Then he rose to go.

"Good-by, Miss Allison!"—he took her hands in both his—"good-by! God bless you!"

Was it her fancy that, just at the last, his voice trembled? He crossed the room; he had gained the door. Another instant, he would be gone—another instant, it might be too late.

"Harry!" she said, softly.

Two strides, it seemed, brought him back to her.

"You called me? For what? To make my going harder?"

"Oh, is it hard? In mercy tell me, for my own heart is breaking!"

"Your heart breaking! Della, Della! what does this mean?"

But the sound of her sobs was his only answer.

"Child," he continued, "can it be that I have judged you wrongly? Look up, my darling! Is it your wish that I should stay?"

Then she found her voice.

"I thought you did not love me enough," she murmured; "but stay, and I will try to make you love me more; or, if you must go, take me with you."

July had given place to January, and warmth to cold; but where was coldness now was warmth, and the winter moon was happier than the July crescent—for in Della Allison's heart was the song of birds and the fragrance of flowers, mingling with the words which stole softly into her ear while nestling in her lover's arms—the words, "My love—my wife!"

BROTHER GARDNER ON DRUNKENNESS.

'Am Brudder Abraham Scott in de hall dis evenin'?' inquired the President, as he looked down the aisles.

'Yes, sah,' answered a voice from the northwest corner.

'Den please step dis way.'

Brother Scott scuffed forward, his head down, and his countenance betraying about seventeen different emotions, and, as he reached the mark, the President continued:

'Brudder Scott, in gwine ober to de old man Johnson's las' nite to borrow a hunk o' butter for breakfast, I discovered some one lyin' on de sidewalk. My first thought was to yell murder. My next thought was to smell of his breaf. Dat settled the case at once. It was not a murder, but a case of dead drunk. I turned de subject ober to git a good look at his face, and who d'ye spose it was?'

Brother Scott gazed straight at a bust of Venus, and had nothing to say.

'It was Brudder Scott,' whispered the President. 'Although two of his children am bar'fut, his wife needs cloze, an' he hasn't a dozen taters in de house, he has taken good money from his pocket an' paid it out fur bad whisky. He wasn't a man when I found him. He was a great big hog! I could smell his breaf six feet away, an' it would have made a dog sick. He had lost his hat, rolled in de slush, and den fallen into a stuperish sleep. I got help an' toted him home, an' to-night he comes to dis meetin' to have a wote among men who work hard, respect demselves and lib sober lives.'

'Ize sorry, sah.'

'No doubt of it, but dat am no defense. A fool excites pity, kase God made him dat way. A lunatic draws sympathy, kase he has met wid misfortune. A drunkard arouses nuffin but contempt. He deliberately goes at it to make a brute of hisself. You hab heard me speak of dis matter on seberal prevus occasions, an' you know how de majority ob dis club feels on de subjeck. In de las' two months you hab been found drunk fo' times'.

'Yes, sah; but I'll quit.'

'I hope you will, but I doubt it. You had ebery thing to lose gettin' drunk de fust time. You hab lost character, respect, money and standin', and dar's leetle hope dat you will see any reason to quit. We kin guard agin thieves by lockin' up our money. We kin put de murderer in prison an' hab him out'er de way. We kin expose de liar an' kiver him wid confusion. But de drunkard—de hog—de beast—who kin trust him? Who kin believe in him? Who wants his society? Who am not degraded by walking beside him? Brudder Scott, you am a bounced man! Your name will be crossed from our rolls; you will be refused admission heah, an' we shall forgit dat you war eber numbered wid us. Let us now attack de reg'lar order ob business.'—Detroit Free Press.

CLEANING HORSES BY STEAM.

A curious machine, which cleans horses by steam, is in daily use at the Third avenue railroad stables in New York, replacing the currycomb. Its standard rate is 100 horses in 10 hours, but yesterday it cleaned 122 between 7.30 a. m. and 5.40 p. m., with an hour's intermission for dinnner. To test it, extra speed was put on, and one horse was actually cleaned in 1m. 15s, and more thoroughly than by the ordinary process. The horse is led uner a bar, from which depend on each side of him arms with universal joints. Turning on the arms are brushes a foot in circumference. These are revolved by steam through the arms and cross-bar at an ordinary rate of 800 revolutions a minute, which can be increased to 1000. A man on each side takes hold of the arm close to the brush and applies the brush to the horse. The steam that whirls the brush makes a noise a good deal like the hissing of a hostler. The universal joints allow the arms and brushes to be moved in any direction. Beginning at the head, the men move the brush along the sides, back and belly, and down the legs of the horse to the feet. A cloud of dust arises in the air, and in two minutes the horse looks like a different creature. The horses were a little nervous at first, but after a few seconds all appeared to be pleased with the operation. At the Third avenue railroad stables it takes six men 13½ hours to clean, or half clean, 128 horses by the ordinary process. If the steam brush is passed over the horse at a moderate speed once, each square inch is actually brushed more than if an ordinary brush had been passed over it 400 times. The dust settles on the floor, accumulates rapidly, and is shoveled into a wheelbarrow and carted away.

WEALTH IN THE MORMON TITHING-HOUSE.

Wagons loaded with the various products of Utah industries are constantly passing through the gate into the tithing-house at Salt Lake. The Mormon law requires that one-tenth of all the things produced by the labor of the faithful shall be given to the church, and the compliance is in the main honest, though attempts at shirking are occasionally detected. The annual income from this source is kept a secret by the rulers; but has been estimated as high as $5,000,000, and undoubtedly reaches $3,000,000. "It is thought by the Gentiles," says a correspondent of the Boston Herald, "and intimated by the saints themselves, that a portion of the tithing fund has been employed, and very effectively employed, in securing favorable legislation in the national Congress. The departed Brigham was wont to speak very contemptuously of Congress, boasting that he cared nothing for it, because he could influence its votes with money whenever he deemed it desirable. And there is reason to think that the boast was not wholly idle."—New York Sun.

The Memphis Appeal relates a humorous incident of the flood: "A certain boat coming up the Mississippi the other day lost her way and bumped up against a frame house. She hadn't more than touched it before an old darkey rammed his head up through a hole in the roof where the chimney once came out and yelled at the captain on the roof: 'Whar is yer gwine wid dat boat? Can't you see nuffin? Fust thing yer knows yer gwine to turn dis house ober, spill de old woman an' de chil'en out in de flood an' drown 'em. Wat yer doin' out here in de country wid yer boat, anyhow? Go on back yander froo de co'n fields an' git back into de ribber whar yer b'longs. Ain't got no business sev'n miles out in de country foolin' roun' people's houses, nohow!" and she backed out.

People who sling slang are respectfully informed that they mustn't say, 'Well, I should smile' any more. The Vassar girl's, 'Well, I should give a silvery ripple!' is now the correct thing.

Forfeits.

They sent him round the circle fair,
To bow before the prettiest there.
I'm bound to say the choice he made
A creditable taste displayed;
Although—I can't say what it meant—
The little maid looked ill-content.

His task was then anew begun—
To kneel before the wittiest one.
Once more that little maid sought he,
And went him down upon his knee.
She bent her eyes upon the floor—
I think she thought the game a bore.

He circled then—his sweet behest
To kiss the one he loved the best.
For all she frowned, for all she chid,
He kissed that little maid, he did.
And then—though why I can't decide—
The little maid looked satisfied.

THE BEST GYMNASIUM FOR GIRLS.

The exercise that is best adapted to develop all parts of the body in a natural, healthy manner is domestic labor. It is always at hand; it can be taken regularly every day, and there is such variety that almost every muscle can be exercised. Housework should never be considered menial nor degrading; it is nature's laboratory in which the girl may obtain not only the best physical development but most valuable knowledge that will fit her for the practical duties of life. This training may be supplemented by other kinds of exercise, such as walking and out-door sports. The very general introduction of foreign help into domestic service has proved most unfortunate for the health of American women.

Closely connected with this neglect of physical training at home is an evil of great magnitude—that is, supreme devotion to brain work. The practice pursued very generally at the present day of confining the girl in school or seminary for a series of years consecutively is attended with the most serious evils. In the language of a popular writer, "it is educating our girls to death." While we would not discard education in all its various departments, extending to the highest culture, we maintain that it is no advantage or blessing if it is to be obtained at the expense of the physical system. There are other parts of the body besides the brain that need faithful training. The highest accomplishments and mental acquisitions will not compensate for impaired constitution and poor health.

FOMENTATION.

Hippocrates recommends hot fomentation for the relief of chest, abdominal and other pains. From his time to the present, hot fomentations have been the favorite remedy for a great variety of affections. If I were asked to select from all possible methods of treatment one, and one alone, with which I would undertake to combat human suffering, without a moment's hesitation I should select hot fomentations. For pains in the head, for pains in the stomach, chest and abdomen, for pains in the limbs, for pains in any part of the body, hot fomentations constitute the best simple remedy.

The old-fashioned method, with flannels wrung out in water, is perhaps the best method.

A happy way of protecting the nurse's hands is to dip the flannel in boiling water, then lay it upon a towel, roll the towel and wring it.

The nurse who understands the hot fomentation art, and applies it industriously, will accomplish ten times as much as the doctor with all his drugs.

In addition to the benefits resulting from this remedy, it is one of the pleasantest imaginable in its application.—Evangelist.

Here is a big temperance lecture. The total value of the rentals of Philadelphia property last year was $28,000,000. During the same year the amount spent in Philadelphia for intoxicating drinks was $24,000,000. Almost as much poured down the throats of thirsty Philadelphians in the shape of beer, whiskey, etc., as was expended in providing homes for all the people of the city who occupied rented houses and all the business enterprises that were accommodated in rented premises. The houses and shops which earned that $28,000,000 are still there ready to earn more; the $24,000,000 worth of drinks is traceable now only in the crop of mischiefs it planted and raised.

General Spinner, ex-treasurer of the United States, gives the following as the true story of how he came to adopt his peculiar signature: 'It was when I was practising law in Herkimer County years ago. It was in 1830. Judge Osborn was my law partner. I was scrawling with my pen at my desk one day, and wrote my name several times in that manner. Osborn happened to see it. He said: 'Hello, old Fishhooks; I'll bet you can not do that again.' I said: 'I'll bet I can.' And I did. I adopted it as my signature then, and I have written my name in that way ever since.'

I have known what the enjoyment and advantages of this life are, and what the more refined pleasures which learning and intellectual power can bestow; and with all the experience that threescore years can give, I now on the eve of my departure declare to you that health is a great blessing; that competence gained by honest industry is a great blessing; and a great blessing it is to have kind, faithful and loving friends and relatives; but the greatest of all blessings, as it is the most ennobling of all privileges, is to be, indeed, a Christian.—S. T. Coleridge.

A mystery explained: 'Lawrence, my dear,' said his wife, wreathed in smiles, 'I wish you had been to church this morning. Mr. Jones was very interesting, and when he prayed for the absent ones—' 'Well, that accounts for it then. I haven't caught such a string of fish for a year as I did this morning.'—Detroit Free Press.

'The meanest job I ever undertook,' mused a Colorado man, 'was that of apologizing to a widow on behalf of a vigilance committee which had hanged her husband by mistake. It was hard to find just the excuse that would satisfy her.'

The truly humane man is the individual who chloroforms an oyster before opening it.

RESERVED POWER.

It is not wise to work constantly up to the highest rate of which we are capable. If the engineer of the railroad were to keep the speed of his train up to the highest rate he could attain with his engine, it would soon be used up. If a horse is driven at the top of his speed for any length of time, he is ruined. It is well enough to try the power, occasionally, of a horse or an engine, by putting on all the motion they will bear, but not continuously. All machinists construct their machines so that there shall be a reserve force. If the power required is four-horse, then they make a six-horse power. In this case it works easily and lasts long. A man who has strength enough to do twelve honest hours of labor in twenty-four, and no more, should do but nine or ten hours' work. The reserve power keeps the body in repair. It rounds out the frame to full proportions. It keeps the mind cheerful, hopeful, happy. The person with no reserve force is always incapable of taking on any more responsibility than he already has. A little exertion puts him out of breath. He cannot increase his work for an hour without danger of an explosion. Such are generally pale, dyspeptic, bloodless, nervous, irritable, despondent, gloomy. We all pity them. The great source of power in the individual is the blood. It runs the machinery of life, and upon it depends our health and strength.

A mill on a stream where water is scanty can be worked but a portion of the time. So a man with little good blood can do but little work. The reserve power must be stored up in this fluid. It is an old saying among stock-raisers that 'blood tells'. It is equally true that blood tells in the sense in which we use the word. If it is only good blood then the more the better. When the reserve power of an individual runs low it is an indication that a change is necessary, and that it is best to stop expending and go to accumulating, just as the miller does when water gets low in the pond. Such a course would save many a person from physical bankruptcy.—Herald of Health.

JUST SO.—'My 'sperience in dis life,' said an aged colored individual, 'has taught me dat de man who swaps mules wid his eyes shut am certain to get the wust of it. Brudderly feeling goes a good ways in case of sickness or want or death, but it seldom reaches down to a hoss trade. If I was buyin' a mule of a man I had known all my life, I should begin at de hoofs an' look dat animile ober cl'ar up to de point of his nose. I shouldn't' spect him to tell me dat he had filed down any teef or puttied ober any hoof cracks. My advice am not to lie or deceive in trading mules, but to answer as few questions as you kin an' seem sort o' keerless whether your offer am 'cepted or not.'

A Washington pension agent was almost paralyzed with astonishment the other day, when he found a veteran of the late war who had sustained a permanent injury while in the army and had not applied for a pension. The veteran had cut an artery in his wrist while opening a bottle of whisky stolen from the Colonel's headquarters, and he said he didn't know a wound of that character entitled him to a pension. The agent soon convinced him of his error, and in a few days he will receive $2800 back pension, minus $1100 pocketed by the agent.—Norristown Herald.

The horse learns to know and to have confidence in a gentle driver, and soon discovers how to secure for himself that which he desires, and to understand his surroundings and his duties. The tone, volume, and inflection of his master's voice indicate much, perhaps more than the words that are spoken. Soothing tones rather than words calm him if excited by fear or anger, and angry or excited tones tend to excite or anger him. In short, bad masters make bad horses. So says the Scientific American.

'When I was once in danger from a tiger,' said an old East Indian veteran, 'I tried sitting down and staring at him, as I had no weapon.' 'How did it work?' eagerly asked a bystander. 'Perfectly; the tiger didn't even offer to touch me.' 'Strange, very strange! How do you account for it?' 'Well, sometimes I've thought it was because I sat down on a high branch of a very tall tree.'

Two old ladies, evidently from out of town, were walking about the streets the other day, when one of them discovered a bunch of bananas. Stopping to look at them, she adjusted her glasses and said, 'Well, I do declare, if them aint bigger string-beans than I ever saw in all my life.'

'No woman is worth looking at after 30, said young Mrs. A., a bride with all the arrogant youthfulness of 21 summers. 'Quite true, my dear,' answered Lady D., a very pretty woman some 10 or 15 years older, 'nor worth listening to before.'—Waif.

SATURDAY, MAY 6, 1882.

THE Springfield Union has been sold by the Springfield Printing Co. to Joseph L. Shipley, its editor for the past year, and under whose management the paper has shown a marked improvement.

JUDGE OTIS P. LORD of the supreme court, who was on the bench last week at Springfield, was stricken with paralysis at his home in Salem on Sunday, and lies in a critical condition. He is 69 years old.

SOME murderously-inclined person sent a couple of infernal machines through the New York post office to Wm. H. Vanderbilt and Cyrus W. Field last Saturday, but they were discovered before doing any damage.

GEN. BUTLER expressed his political position pretty accurately when he told a reporter the other day, in response to the inquiry if he had left politics, "No—they've left me." Still, it will hardly be advisable for the general's opponents to consider him strictly and thoroughly dead as yet.

OUR Legislature don't dare trust the people yet to vote on the question of biennial elections, and has defeated the resolve submitting the question to the people, by a vote of 60 to 93. By and by the people will take hold of the matter, and send men to represent them who will vote differently from this; see if they don't.

THE House at Washington last Saturday unseated Gen. Chalmers of Mississippi and gave his seat to Mr. Lynch, the first colored man who has been admitted to Congress for several years. Gen. Chalmers got into the House in the first place by bulldozing the colored people in his "shoestring" district, and has retained his seat only by the connivance of the Democrats.

BOYS who carry pistols, read dime novels, and ape border ruffian manners in general, have a sharp reminder of the dangerous tendency of their course, in the sentence of young Dwight Kidder at Springfield, last week Friday, to 20 years in State prison, for shooting his brother. Young Kidder was a boy of no worse habits than hundreds of other boys have who are still walking the streets; and in some moment of unbridled passion these boys are just as liable to pull out their pistols and commit murder as was Kidder. The dangerous pistol habit needs stern correction, and there is a pressing duty for parents in this matter. The boys will not see their danger, but their parents should.

A young man in Germany recently wagered $50 that he and his betrothed could kiss each other 10,000 times within ten hours. They made out 2000 kisses in the first hour, 1000 in the second, and 750 in the third. Then they both broke down. The youth's lips were stricken with cramp, and the maiden fainted away. Later on in the evening she was compelled to take to her bed with a sharp attack of neuralgia. An even more distressing result ensued, for it led to the breaking off, by mutual consent, of the matrimonial engagement.

The smallest baby in the world was recently born at Candelaria, Nevada. The father is a miner and weighs 190 pounds. The mother weighs perhaps 160 pounds. The child is a male, as perfectly formed as any human being can be, but upon its birth it only weighed eight ounces. Its face is about the size of a horse chestnut, and a ring worn on the little finger of its mother was easily slipped over its foot nearly up to the knee.

Upon hearing of the Spuyten Duyvil disaster and the death of Park Valentine, Edwin Stone, who had been for many years in the employ of his father, and to whom the young man had offered a comfortable support as long as he lived, almost fainted and was immediately taken sick. Since then he has gradually failed, and he died last week, apparently from grief.

In the Jennie Cramer trial at New Haven, Prof. Chittenden has given a minute report of his analysis of Jennie's remains, which shows that the body contained 3.1192 grains of arsenic, a fatal dose, while the varying quantities of the mineral found in the different muscular tissues, indicate that the poison had not been in the body more than 24 hours before death.

The steamer Glamorgan, which arrived at Boston from Liverpool on Monday, had to make a wide detour from her usual course, on account of the presence of numerous icebergs in her track. She passed one iceberg fully 500 feet high, and at least 100 other large ones, on which were seen numerous polar bears and a large number of seals.

Congress has at last done something for the life-saving service, having passed a bill advancing the pay of station keepers, and continuing their wages for two years if disabled while on duty, while in case a keeper or surfman is killed in the service his family is to be paid for two years. Several new stations are also to be established.

An electric light monopoly has been created by the union of the Edison Electric Light Company with the Gramme Electrical Company. By this combination the several large companies that claim to control all of the patents applying to existing systems of lighting by electricity are formed into one monster organization.

Turpin Jencks, the old man who was put on trial at Springfield last week on the charge of murdering John Otis of East Longmeadow last August, was found guilty of manslaughter, and sentenced to six years in the State prison. Jencks is 78 years old, and was under the influence of rum when the crime was committed.

Housekeepers still find it necessary to keep their furnaces or other heating apparatus running uninterruptedly, and are beginning to wonder when it will settle down warm enough so they can dispense with their winter heat, and save a little towards filling up their coal bins for another winter.

The fast New York and Boston express has no difficulty in making its run between the two cities in six hours, in accordance with its new schedule. The average time made by the train is 45 miles an hour, which is within two miles per hour of the fastest train in England. The train is limited to six cars.

Rev. O. R. Hunt, who has supplied the pulpit of the Baptist church since last December with great acceptance, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the church, and will move his family here directly, occupying the tenement in Dr. Warren's house on Park street, recently vacated by F. F. Marcy.

Dog owners are manifesting their usual forgetfulness about the tax due on their canines the 1st of this month. Only a few have paid so far, and it is noticed that those most prompt in paying now are men who have been prosecuted for their delay in the past. A few prosecutions might work well with the present delinquents.

W. H. Hitchcock closed his skating rink at Northampton Wednesday evening, some 400 or 500 people being present on the occasion. He has had a very successful season, and will reopen there in the fall. He contemplates giving people here and at Monson a chance to try the rollers once more, before laying them away for the summer.

The officers of the Palmer National Bank have for some time felt the need of more capital to meet the demands of their increasing business, and a special meeting of the stockholders is to be held on the 22nd inst., to consider the question of adding $25,000 to the capital stock, making it $100,000. The proposition will unquestionably be carried by a large vote.

The r-less months have come, and the toothsome bivalve s supposed now to retire from public view for his summer vacation. The fact is, however, that the traditions of the elders are set at naught by a large portion of the lovers of the mollusk in this practical age, and its consumption goes on right through the summer, with little diminution from its winter proportions.

With a Good Templar lodge in our midst, and a number of good citizens who can talk pretty stiff temperance on occasion, isn't it a little singular that not a person from our village appeared before the selectmen, Monday, to urge restricted license? Some of the selectmen feel so. If there had been a little of the right kind of talk put in then and there, we might perhaps have had even fewer licenses than we now have.

The probate court, at its session in Springfield on Tuesday, granted administration on the estates of Parley G. Green of Holland, Charles S. Green administrator; Alvin Colburn of Wales, Julius M. Report has it that a certain ambitious young man from this place went to a skating rink in a neighboring town recently, and, representing himself as a "professor" from Boston, secured free admission. Being recognized soon by a young woman, he was shortly called upon to give an exhibition of his skill, which he started to do, but in jumping over a stick he went "all in a heap," which so disheartened him that he quietly folded his tent and stole away, a wiser and a lamer boy.

Ryan & Robinson's circus comes to town to-day, and will pitch its tents on Converse's land east of Park street. James Robinson, the bright particular star of the circus, is unquestionably the most daring and skillful equestrian living; the other performers are all excellent, the menagerie contains a choice collection of animals, and the show as a whole is one well worth seeing, and is highly commended wherever it has exhibited. Of course everybody will go, as this is the first, and may be the only exhibition of the kind here this season.

The 35th annual meeting of the Hampden Co. Teachers' Association will be held at the high school hall in Springfield on Friday, the 19th inst. Hon. B. G. Northrop, secretary of the Connecticut Board of Education, will deliver a lecture on "Memory and How to Train it," and Superintendent Marble of the Worcester schools will lecture on "Seeing the Invisible." There will also be several interesting papers and discussions. Lawyer Strong of this place is assigned to the negative side of a discussion in relation to the capacity and compensation of primary school teachers.

Dr. Warren met with a severe accident at Thorndike last Sunday afternoon. While driving near the upper bridge, an iron on one of the shafts broke, letting them on the horse's heels, and the animal ran, throwing out the doctor and his wife's sister. The latter escaped without serious injury, but both bones of the doctor's left leg were broken below the knee, and his ankle severely sprained. The broken bones were set by Drs. Stowe and Rand, and he is now doing well. Dr. G. H. Wilkins, of New Hampshire, will look after the doctor's patients during his enforced retirement from active service.

The New London Northern Railroad will make a few changes in its time table next Monday. The 10 o'clock a. m. train from Brattleboro to Miller's Falls will then run through to Palmer, leaving Amherst at 12.08 and arriving here at 12.53 p. m. The steamboat train will leave Brattleboro at 4.10 p. m., reaching Palmer at 6.26. The 11 a. m. train from Palmer to Amherst will be discontinued, and the train now leaving here at 1.25 p. m. will start at 1.15, and run through to Miller's Falls. This train will, on and after June 26th, run through to South Vernon, where it will connect with the summer White Mountain express. No change is made at present in trains south of Palmer.

The adjourned meeting of the executive committee of the improvement association was held at Dr. Stowe's Monday evening, several members being present and enjoying a social evening, but no particular business was transacted, as a fuller attendance was desired, and the meeting was adjourned to next Monday evening, at 7.30 o'clock, at the same place, when it is earnestly hoped that every member of the committee will be present, as important matters are to be brought up for consideration. In view of the merciless destruction of shade trees along the highways in some parts of the town, the committee may take steps for the calling of a special town meeting, to adopt measures for the protection of the trees, and the prosecution of those who cut them down without regard either to the law or public welfare.

Landlord S. J. Stone, of the Mansion House, has about completed the alterations in the house, and has made a number of marked improvements in the interior arrangements. The ladies' parlor has been moved to the right of the stairway, next to the dining room, and newly carpeted and furnished, while the old parlor has been fitted up for a reading room. The partition between the main hall and the office has been mostly removed, making a wide arched entrance to the office, which has been newly sheathed and papered. The room adjoining the office has been fitted up neatly as a barber's shop, and is occupied by a competent white barber from Springfield. The next room is turned into a cozy private parlor. Some set wash-bowls have been placed in the side hall next the dining room, supplied with running water from a large tank. The dining room has been entirely refurnished and the tables are bright with new silverware, crockery, etc. The small room in the rear has been fitted up for a second-class dining room. In the sleeping rooms new chamber sets, bedding and carpets have been placed, and the whole interior is renovated and brightened up to an extent which shows that Mr. Stone intends to make his guests comfortable, and knows how to do it.

The adjourned hearing before the selectmen on the license question, Monday afternoon, was attended by several people from Three Rivers, Thorndike and Bondsville, but not a solitary person put in an appearance from this village to oppose the applicants for licenses. The selectmen, however, took into consideration the large vote against licensing at the annual town meeting, and granted only 12 of the 20 applications considered, thus reducing the number 25 per cent from last year's list. The licenses granted are as follows: First class (innholders, to be drank on the premises)—C. P. Stone, J. W. Weeks, S. J. Stone, Palmer; P. H. Rochford, Three Rivers. Second class (beer)—Edwin Bass, Palmer. Second and fifth class (beer and bottling)—M. Fox, Caryl Brothers, Palmer. Druggists—O. P. Allen, G. L. Hitchcock & Co., Palmer. First and fourth class—Joseph Thompson, John Feeney, Palmer; Cornelius Kelliher, Thorndike. The other applicants were given leave to withdraw. Three more applications remain to be considered, but it is hoped that no more licenses will be granted. The selectmen voted to receive no more applications; and all licenses not paid for within ten days from time of granting will be revoked. The action of the selectmen in thus reducing the number of drinking places in town will give general satisfaction, and now if the parties who have received licenses will conduct their business according to the strict letter of the law, we shall see but little drunkenness on our streets the coming year. Will they do it?

THORNDIKE.

The four small-pox patients are all doing nicely, and are on the road to recovery. Another young man has just been taken sick, and it is thought it may prove to be a case of small-pox, but there are no indications of any more cases, and the prompt precautions taken will, it is believed, prevent auy further spread of the disease.

Mr. Editor:—Is it Butlerism, Davisism, Bossism or a want of judgment that works in the veins of the remnant of the school committee who held their office over the last election, that they should give H. C. Davis forty dollars or so for enumerating the scholars in town, when the assessors were willing to do the work just as well for nothing? It comes more properly in the line of assessors' duties, and would cost them little or no trouble. Such petit jobbery should be looked after if we expect to keep the taxes down so that strangers may be induced to invest their money in town, and citizens may not be burdened with unnecessary taxes.

Editor Ware Standard:—The fire district meeting next Monday is an important meeting to the property owners, who should take a lively interest in the means of safety to their homes. It is said there has been considerable money squandered in useless means for extinguishing fires. This will often occur when the tax payers abstain from attending the annual meeting, and leave the whole management of the fire department in the hands of the non-taxpayers to run it in their own interest. Who are better judges of what the department needs and the amount of money to be raised, than those who own the property to be protected? Every house owner should take interest enough in the annual meeting to be present next Monday afternoon at the new engine house. ***

FIRES.—Twenty-four ice houses at Lloyd's Landing, N. Y., were burned on Monday at a loss of $20,000.——A Baptist church at Dover, N. H., and a brush factory, were burned Tuesday. The walls of the church fell in after the fire, killing Judge Varney, a prominent citizen, and probably fatally injuring four other persons who were looking at the ruins.

The statistics of the city library of Springfield show that the use of books and papers upon the premises has more than doubled during the year, the number of persons using them being 23,911 against 10,171 for last year. The number of books added to the library during the year was 1197.

It is reported that a syndicate of seven Scotch dry goods houses, consisting of Forbes & Wallace of Springfield, and firms in Worcester, Providence, Hartford, Rochester, Buffalo and Cleveland, are negotiating for the entire stock of A. T. Stewart & Co., with favorable prospects.

The Springfield city government has voted to provide 16 electric lights on Main and State streets, at an annual cost of not over $3300, these taking the place of 106 gas lamps, and costing about $1100 more than the latter. They will be placed on poles 30 feet high.

Important discoveries of the largest ancient ruins yet found on this continent, which extend for a distance of 15 miles up and down the banks of Las Animos river, about 40 miles from Durango, in Rio Grande county, N. M., have recently been made.

Hon. Horace Maynard of Knoxville, Tenn., ex-postmaster general, and an uncompromising Union man during the war, died suddenly on Wednesday, aged 67 years. He was a native of Westboro, Mass.

The bride at a Bay City (Mich.) wedding would submit to kisses only on condition that they were paid for at $1 each. They sold readily at that price, and $132 was realized for a charity.

A steamer having a picnic party on board exploded her boiler near Kingville, S. C., last week Friday, killing five persons and seriously injuring five others.

The selectmen have granted five licenses, as follows: First class, to sell liquors of any kind to be drunk on the premises, but not to keep an open bar—Thomas Kendrick, of the old hotel. Fourth class, to sell liquors of any kind, not to be drunk on the premises—Patrick J. Crowe, in his building on Water street. Fifth class, to sell malt liquors, cider and light wines, containing not more than 15 per cent of alcohol, not to be drunk on the premises—Caryl Brothers, in the basement of Music Hall block. Sixth class, to druggists, to sell liquors of any kind for medicinal, mechanical and chemical purposes only—Fred C. Blood and D. W. Miner, M. D., at their drug stores. There are two or three more whose applications are under consideration, and which may possibly be granted. In one of the cases there has been a petition circulated for signatures asking the selectmen not to grant the license applied for.

The annual meeting of Fire District No. 1 is to be held in Firemen's Hall next Monday at 2 o'clock, p. m. Besides the usual business, such as choice of officers for the ensuing year, hearing the reports for the past year, etc., there are articles in the warrant to see if the district will pay the Oregon Engine Co. for their services for the ensuing year; if it will purchase hose for the use of the department; and if it will purchase a hook and ladder truck. This is greatly needed, as property enough might have been saved in the past year, by the use of such an apparatus, to have paid for it twice over. We learn from the report of the engineers that there have been 13 alarms of fire during the year. The amount of insurance on the property destroyed was $9400. Amount paid for loss on same, $6903. We find from the report of the prudential committee that the total expense of the department, including cost of new engine house, has been $6408.90, but of this the fire department have used less than $600 for the ordinary expenses of the department, the remainder being for the new building, which has paid at a rate of about nine per cent on its total cost for the three months it has been occupied, besides what has been saved in the better storage of the fire apparatus.

The national government has discovered at Boston and other ports a long-standing system of undervaluing fruits imported from Italy, and its revenue will be somewhat increased. The fraud attaches to the shippers abroad, it is said.

Consumption.

IMPORTANT TO THE PUBLIC AS WELL AS THE MEDICAL PROFESSION.

Hall's Journal of Health, referring to consumption, makes the following important statement:

"Consumption usually begins with a slight, dry cough in the morning, then, on going to bed, getting more and more frequent, with more and more phlegm, increasing debility, thinness of flesh, shortness of breath and quickness of pulse. In fatal cases its average course is about two years; hence the importance of arresting the disease at as early a stage as possible, and the sooner rational means are employed for this purpose the greater chance of success. The disease is owing to an irritation commencing in the throat and extending to the lungs, so that their action is interferred with, and the blood does not receive sufficient oxygen to purify it. The most marked sign of lung disease is emaciation; and the most positive indication of returning health is increase in weight."

So speaks Hall's Journal of Health, and we may add that in desperate cases, and, in fact, in all cases of consumption, or troubles of the throat and lungs, immediate relief may be obtained and a permanent cure effected by the use of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, a medicine known for more than thirty-five years as an unfailing remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis and all pulmonary and pectorial diseases. That the worst cases of consumption have been cured by the use of Hall's Balsam has been attested to by the thousands who have used it, or have been cognizant of its wonderful remedial efficacy.

Peravian Syrup cures dyspepsia, general debility, liver complaint, boils, humors, chronic diarrhœa, nervous affections, female complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood. 1y3

To prevent night sweats, to ease the cough and arrest emaciation and decline, no other form of malt or medicine can possibly equal Malt Bitters. This original nutrient and tonic is rich in nourishment and strength. It tides the patient over the most critical stages of the disease, digests and assimilates food, enriches and purifies the blood. It builds up the system by stimulating into new life the entire process of digestion. m

THE STEINWAY PIANO

IS THE

STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE

Facts, say the professors, are obtained by the concurrent opinion of the largest number of best able to judge. This principle applies to the Steinway pianos, as the largest number of people pronounce them to be the best, and the firm is doing the largest volume of business of any piano-making concern in the world. Purchasers, by paying $75, $100, $150, $200 or $300 more, according to the style, for them than for any other pianos; dealers, by comparing every other piano with them; makers, by putting their pianos below them in price, and then claiming that they are pretty nearly as good, because they "have some of Steinway's workmen," or "foreman from Steinway's," or "use Steinway's scales," etc., all proclaim that

THE STEINWAY

IS THE ACKNOWEDGED STANDARD

PIANO,

Not only in this country, but also in Europe it stands as far ahead of all other pianos as it does in America.

This fact being established that the Steinway is the best, of course the next best is that which is nearest like it, which purchasers can decide for themselves by listening and comparing with the standard.

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER

Is a scientific combination of some of the most powerful restorative agents in the vegetable kingdom. It restores gray hair to its original color. It makes the scalp white and clean. It cures dandruff and humors, and falling out of the hair. It furnishes the nutritive principle by which the hair is nourished and supported. It makes the hair moist, soft and glossy, and is unsurpassed as a hair dressing. It is the most economical preparation ever offered to the public, as its effects remain a long time, making only an occasional application necessary. It is recomended and used by eminent medical men, and officially endorsed by the State Assayer of Massachusetts. The popularity of Hall's Hair Renewer has increased with the test of many years, both in this country and in foreign lands, and it is now known and used in all the civilized countries of the world.

Essay of S'S.

Such strange sorts of souls as are on the sphere!
Some social, some silent, some stern and severe.
Some smiling so sweetly, some sober and staid,
Some stay in the sunshine, and some in the shade.
Some stooping, some straight, some slender, some stout,
Some starving in silence, some supping with shout.
Some suffering and sick, some sturdy and strong.
Some sorry and sighing, and some singing song.
Some saucy and scolding, some shiftless, some shrewd,
Some sincere and steadfast, submissive, subdued.
The stylish, the simple, the slow, the sedate,
Speculators and swindlers, and statesmen in state.
The sculptor and salesman, the savage, the sage,
The saint and the sinner, the speaker on stage,
Segar-smokers, swearers, sots, sailors on sea,
The spreader of scandal, smooth slanderer she.
Some seamstresses, some at the spindle and spool,
Soothsayers and stewards, and scholars at school.
Sectarians and surgeons, and shepherds of sheep,
Surveyors, shoemakers, and sluggards in sleep.
Some slaves and some soldiers, some scoundrels and scamps,
Some scribblers of stanzas for sake of the stamps.

The Madison Square Theatre management of New York, which made such a success last season of "Hazel Kirke" throughout the country, has already engaged nearly 200 actors for next season, and it is proposed to send out a better class of artists than have ever been seen in the towns and cities of the United States. They will present "Esmeralda," "Hazel Kirke," and "The Professor."

On one section of the Mexican Central Railroad, a few miles below El Paso, the road crosses a sandy desert, where in the morning the section men sometimes find several feet of sand upon a portion of the track, and in another the sand will be blown out from under the track for the same depth. Sheds or fences will have to be erected across the desert the same as if for snow.

A San Francisco jury recently awarded a book agent $120 for an assault committed on him by a man who didn't like his book. California is plainly the book agents' paradise, and they should all go there. One assault is as good as a large number of subscriptions, and makes an excellent advertisement.

A new amusement in Indiana is egg jumping. The act of jumping causes the involuntary closing of the hands in a tight grip; and in the contest of egg jumping, whoever jumps furthest without breaking the egg that he holds in either hand takes the prize.

WHAT HAPPENED TO

MR. JOSEPH BEACH.

STONE IN THE KIDNEY EXPELLED AFTER USING DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" ABOUT TWO WEEKS.

One of the most remarkable cases that has ever been brought to the notice of the public is that of Mr. J. S. Beach, of Stone Bridge, Ulster Co., N. Y. Mr. Beach had suffered since October 18th, 1874, from the presence of Calculus or Stone in the right Kidney. No less than seven physicians were employed at different times, to whom Mr. Beach paid hundreds of dollars for medical treatment, with only temporary relief from his agony.

By the urgent solicitations of his friends he was induced to try Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy"—experienced a marked improvement from the first day he began to use the medicine; on the 15th day of September he voided a stone as large as could be passed through the natural channel.

Mr. Beach concludes a long letter to Dr. Kennedy by saying: "It will always afford me pleasure to recommend the "Favorite Remedy" to those who may be suffering from difficulties of the kidneys and bladder, or any disorders arising from an impure state of the blood." The "Favorite Remedy" is sold by all druggists. The Doctor's only address is Rondout, New York. 4w4

MR. JOSEPH BEACH.

STONE IN THE KIDNEY EXPELLED AFTER USING DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" ABOUT TWO WEEKS.

One of the most remarkable cases that has ever been brought to the notice of the public is that of Mr. J. S. Beach, of Stone Bridge, Uister Co., N. Y. Mr. Beach had suffered since October 18th, 1874, from the presence of Calculus or Stone in the right Kidney. No less than seven physicians were employed at different times, to whom Mr. Beach paid hundreds of dollars for medical treatment, with only temporary relief from his agony.

By the urgent solicitations of his friends he was induced to try Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy"—experienced a marked improvement from the first day he began to use the medicine; on the 15th day of September he voided a stone as large as could be passed through the natural channel.

Mr. Beach concludes a long letter to Dr. Kennedy by saying: "It will always afford me pleasure to recommend the "Favorite Remedy" to those who may be suffering from difficulties of the kidneys and bladder, or any disorders arising from an impure state of the blood." The "Favorite Remedy" is sold by all druggists. The Doctor's only address is Rondout, New York. 4w4

Longfellow's Last Poem.

MAD RIVER IN THE WHITE MOUNTAINS.

TRAVELER.

Why dost thou wildly rush and roar,
Mad River, O Mad River?
Wilt thou not pause and cease to pour
Thy hurrying, headlong waters o'er
This rocky shelf forever?

What secret trouble stirs thy breast?
Why all this fret and flurry?
Dost thou not know that what is best
In this too restless world is rest
From over-work and worry?

THE RIVER.

What would'st thou in these mountains seek,
O stranger from the city?
Is it perhaps some foolish freak
Of thine, to put the words I speak
Into a plaintive ditty?

TRAVELER.

Yes; I would learn of thee thy song,
With all its flowing numbers,
And in a voice as fresh and strong
As thine is, sing it all day long,
And hear it in my slumbers.

THE RIVER.

A brooklet nameless and unknown
Was I at first, resembling
A little child, that all alone
Comes venturing down the stairs of stone,
Irresolute and trembling.

Later, by wayward fancies led,
For the wide world I panted;
Out of the forest dark and dread,
Across the open fields I fled,
Like one pursued and haunted.

I tossed my arms, I sang aloud,
My voice exultant blending
With thunder from the passing cloud,
The wind, the forest bent and bowed,
The rush of rain descending.

I heard the distant ocean's call,
Imploring and entreating;
Drawn onward, o'er this rocky wall
I plunged, and the loud waterfall
Made answer to the greeting.

And now, beset with many ills,
A toilsome life I follow;
Compelled to carry from the hills
These logs to the impatient mills
Below there in the hollow.

Yet something ever cheers and charms
The rudeness of my labors;
Daily I water with these arms
The cattle of a hundred farms,
And have the birds for neighbors.

Men call me Mad, and well they may,
When, full of rage and trouble,
I burst my banks of sand and clay,
And sweep their wooden bridge away,
Like withered reeds or stubble.

Now go and write thy little rhyme,
As of thine own creating.
Thou seest the day is past its prime;
I can no longer waste my time;
The mills are tired of waiting.

CAPT. STANLEY'S BODY-GUARD.

"Well, yes," said my host, Capt. Stanley, as brave a soldier as ever drew a sabre, "I have seen some hard times since I have been out here, and so have we all. A man in our profession can't pass five years of his life on the plains without getting some hard knocks, I tell you."

We had just finished a late supper, and having drawn our chairs about the wide fireplace, had filled our pipes preparatory to indulging in a social smoke. There were a dozen of us in the room, all except myself wearing Uncle Sam's "honored blue." I was at that time correspondent for an Eastern paper, and had been ordered to the frontier to "write up" the campaign which Gen. Crook was about to undertake against the Cheyennes who had broken away from their reservation. Finding that a detachment led by Capt. Stanley, the commander of old Fort Frazier, was expected to bear the brunt of the work I joined my fortunes with it, accompanied it on a perilous scout of fourteen hundred miles, and we had but just returned to the fort. We had got back, too, just in time to escape what Western men call a "blizzard." And what is that? It is an old-fashioned New England snow storm a dozen times intensified. The wind blows as if it would sweep everything before it, the cold is so piercing that one shivers over the hottest fire, and the air is filled, not with snow, but with sharp needles of ice, which seem to threaten destruction to every living thing exposed to its fury. We were all snugly housed, our jaded horses were munching their barley in their warm stables, the sentries were standing grim and silent in their boxes, and those of us who were fortunate enough to have no duty to call us out into the storm, spread our hands over the cheerful wood fire and congratulated ourselves on the safe ending of our tedious scout.

I said there were a dozen of us in the room; but I must not forget to mention Capt. Stanley's body guard, four magnificent Scotch deer-hounds, which lay stretched out in front of the fire. They were large shaggy animals, with immense bone and muscle, and bore on their bodies numerous evidences of the battles through which they had passed. They were terrible fighters, and the ease with which they could overtake and pull down an antelope was surprising. They accompanied us on the scout, and I could not imagine why it was that they were treated with so much kindness and consideration by every member of the command. On this particular night I was to find out.

"How the wind blows!" exclaimed a young lieutenant, from his seat in the chimney corner. "I declare, it will tear the stockade up by the roots."

"Yes, it is a wild night; and I hadn't been on the plains as long as you have, Jack," said the captain, addressing himself to the lieutenant, "before I was called upon to face just such a storm as this without shelter of any kind, except what was to be found in the hills, and under circumstances that were calculated to freeze the blood in the veins of the bravest man that ever stepped. Those hours of horror turned my hair white as you see it now, and made me an old man before my time. I cannot recall them without shuddering."

The captain puffed vigorously at his well-blackened brier root for a few minutes, and after making sure that it was well lighted continued:

"I always was fond of horses, dogs and guns, and I can scarcely remember the time when I did not own some of the very best. My pointers could not be beaten, my pony would take a fence almost as well as any of my father's thoroughbreds, and my little fowling piece was sure death to any bird that got up within any reasonable distance. When I left home to go to West Point it almost broke my heart to part from my pets; but my uncle, who was an ardent sportsman, assured me that if I would pass a creditable examination at the end of my school term, he would present me with a pack of dogs that would more than take the place of the one I left behind; my father, a veteran of the Mexican war and a great admirer of the cavalry, told me that if I would fit myself to enter that branch of the service, he would give me the finest horse in his stable, and my mother said she would give me another. Encouraged by these promises, and ambitious to distinguish myself in my chosen profession, I worked hard and stood among the first five at the end of the course. Here are the dogs my uncle gave me," said the captain, his stern face softening as he gazed almost lovingly at the splendid animals before him, "and the horses—well, one was killed during a fight on the Sweetwater, and the other—poor Gipsy! She was my mother's gift.

"As soon as I received my commission I was ordered to report to the commanding officer of Fort Scott for duty. The officers were all lovers of the chase, and at the sight of my horses and hounds they received me with open arms. In company with the neighboring ranchmen, we hunted almost constantly; there was little scouting to be done, for the Indians were quietly settled on their reservation, and when winter came and the first snow covered the ground, the sport we had in coursing antelope was simply magnificent.

"Early one morning, while I was returning to the post with a freshly killed antelope slung across my saddle, I noticed that my eyes burned, and that the surface of the snow, from which the bright rays of the sun were reflected with almost dazzling brilliancy, seemed to be covered with floating specks. Now and then something that looked like a chain danced across the range of my vision, and this would be followed by multitudes of miniature pin wheels and sky-rockets. I knew that the glare of the sun on the snow had affected my eyes, but I thought nothing of it, for I was foolish enough to believe that it would wear off in time.

"When I reached the fort I found there was a runner from the Red Eagle agency, who had brought information which rendered it necessary that a courier should be sent with dispatches to Fort Morris. The dispatches were ready and the colonel was waiting for me. I changed horses, received my instructions and set out at once with my Henry rifle slung at my back, and my hounds trotting along before me. For two or three days I had noticed a suspicious bank of clouds hanging in the northern horizon, and the colonel had warned me to make haste for a storm was brewing. Acting upon his advice I pushed ahead as rapidly as possible, shading my burning eyes with my hand, and now and then calling to my dogs, which seemed inclined to turn about and give battle to a pack of gaunt and hungry wolves that was following behind me. I saw with no little uneasiness that although the south wind was blowing strongly, that threatening bank of clouds in the north was rising rapidly against it. The Arctic King was coming in his might, and I knew that the storm would overtake me long before I could reach my destination. I began to feel timid. I did not like the persistency with which those famine breeders hung on my trail. There was something ominous in it.

"Just before dark I reached my camping ground. It was a sheltered nook among the hills, bare of snow, and there was a spring of good water close by. After putting the blankets on the mare and feeding her and making her as comfortable as I could for the night, I built a fire under the lee of a rock, and with my dogs around me, sat down to eat my supper. Just then the war of the elements began. With a roar and a rush that were terrific, the advance guard of the Arctic forces struck the south wind and drove it back. Then there was a lull, such as sometimes occurs in battle when the opposition forces are gathering themselves for a decisive effort, and with another mighty roar the final onslaught was made. The blizzard was in full blast. The air was literally filled with ice. It grew colder and colder every minute and my fire seemed to give out no heat. I could not look at the blaze for the pain in my eyes had increased until it was almost unbearable. Finally I wrapped my blankets around me and lay down to sleep.

"How long I slumbered I do not know. I was awakened by one of my dogs, which came up and licked my face. I started up and threw off the blankets. It was pitch dark. The blizzard was still raging fearfully, and the wolves had approached so close to my camp that I could hear the patter of their feet as they ran about among the scrub oaks, and my faithful dogs now and then gave a growl to warn them off. A stamping among the brutes told me that my mare was rendered uneasy by their presence, and I thought I would go out and speak to her. I looked toward the place where my fire had been kindled but could not see a single coal. It had burned itself completely out. Groping my way on my hands and knees to the pile of fuel I had gathered before going to sleep, I picked up a stick and began poking around for the coals. Presently a sharp stinging sensation in my hand told me that I had found one. I could feel the pain but I could not see the coal, and yet it must have been a live one or else it could not have burned me. With trembling hands and a terrible sinking at my heart I took out a match and lighted it. I could distinctly hear it burning, but I could not see the blaze, although I held the match until my fingers were scorched. Then I dropped it, and with a scream of terror jumped to my feet. Great heaven! I was snow-blind.

"With the experience I now have I know that my situation would have been desperate if I had been in full possession of my sight; as it was I gave myself up for lost. I was paralyzed with horror, and for a time I could not move. The actions of one of my dogs aroused me. He bounded forward and began a terrible battle with one of the wolves. With another cry of terror I groped my way back to my bed, and catching up my rifle succeeded after a desperate scramble in placing myself on the top of the rock. By this time the battle between my dogs and the wolves was in full progress, and a fierce one it was, too. I fired shot after shot into the air in the hope of frightening the famide-breeders, but they were rendered too desperate by hunger to fear the smell of gunpowder. How earnestly I prayed that my noble dogs might succeed in fighting off their savage foes! I shouted to them words of encouragement to which they had never failed to respond during a hunt, and finally I knew that they were gaining the victory. They drove the wolves away from me, but the ravenous animals were not to be cheated. They turned their attention to my horse. I fairly cried as I stood there sightless and helpless on my rock and listened to the struggles of the frightened beast as she strove with desperate energy to break her fastenings. To my great joy she succeeded, and with a shrill neigh of terror set off up the valley. I heard her hoofs clattering over the bare ground and yelps of the savage pack as it followed close at her heels, and then all was still. I called to my faithful guardians and each one answered to his name by a joyful bark, all except Major, whose response was a mournful whine. Poor fellow! He had been severely handled.

"I did not delude myself with the hope that I had seen the last of the wolves. I knew that my steed, fleet and enduring as she was, would in the end be overtaken and torn in pieces by her tireless pursuers, and that having whetted their appetites they would return in sufficient numbers to overpower my guards and make an end of me. I had always prayed for a soldier's death, and the thought that I must give up my life in this horrible way was agonizing.

"I cannot tell how long I stood there waiting for the wolves to come back and put me out of misery, for I was dazed with terror. I fell into a sort of stupor from which I was aroused by a bark from one of my hounds, and (I know every note uttered by these animals as well as I know the sound of my own voice) it was a bark of welcome. Help was near. My first feeling was one of amazement, and before I had recovered from it I heard a rifle shot and then another and another. The whole pack broke out into a joyous baying. I cocked my rifle with my benumbed hands and fired all the remaining cartridges into the air. I tried to shout, but could not utter a sound. My head reeled and I fell from the rock.

"I remained a full month at Mr. Butler's hospitable ranche before I was able to return to the post. He and two of his neighbors had been out after black-tails, and were caught in the blizzard, but knowing they must reach home or run the risk of being snowed up in the hills, they boldly faced it, and a fortunate thing it was for me that they did so. They saw the wolves devouring my mare and took the back trail expecting to find my mangled body. When they discovered me lying behind that rock surrounded by my bleeding hounds no words could express their astonishment. Close by there were seven dead wolves and three disabled ones that were trying to crawl off. These they shot. That these dead and wounded members of the pack were not devoured by their comrades was owing to the fierceness with which my brave dogs fought them. They were badly cut up, but they received the same kind nursing that I did, and here they are, as ready for a fight as they ever were. Do you know why everybody in the fort thinks so much of my body-guard, Harry?"

I thought I did.—Harry Castlemon in Our Continent.

A GOOD SENTIMENT.—'He thinks so much of his mother.' Well, why shouldn't he? What sort of a man is he who does not care for his mother? If you had married him, you might well have fears for your future happiness. Do you think, because he has chosen you for your pretty face, that he must forget the good old woman who spent her young life in his interests, who cared for him in his infancy, and loved him when he was only a shrieking nuisance to everybody else, and 'only that dreadful boy' to every one but his parents? From her he inherits some portion of his physical and moral nature. He has been guided by her precepts. You will hardly find a fine man who has not a fine mother, and now he is no longer a boy, and she is going down the hill she helped him to climb, and you complain that he 'thinks so much of her.' You ought to regret it if he did not. The time will come when the baby on your knee will be a man, when you will be old and wrinkled and gray-haired; be just now, lest retribution come at last. What can it matter if the mother's vanity is flattered by her boy liking her gingerbread better than yours, or thinking that she alone of all earthly seamstresses can make a shirt? Smile at the weakness. He loves you for other things—for your youth, your beauty; all that his mother has lost. Say, with pride and joy, not with anger and resentment, 'He thinks so much of his mother!'

GETTING SATISFACTION.—"Jeff" is a colored porter in an Indianapolis jobbing house. Jeff had a box of glass on his shoulder and two cans of oil in his hands, when a white man jostled him as he was turning into the store. "I beg your pardon, sah," said Jeff, though it was the white man who was to blame. But this would never answer. The white man followed him into the store. "Did you bump agin me a purpose?" "No, sah," said Jeff, "I did not, and I asked your pardon outside." "I don't let no man bump me," growled the white bulldozer. "I have 'pologized to you sah." "I don't low no d—d nigger to bump agin me," the bulldozer replied. "Well, sah," said Jeff, "I've offered every 'pology a gentleman could ask; I didn't bump you; but if you'll step out on the sidewalk I'll bump you. Come out and I'll mop the ground with you; just step out and I'll mop the pavement with you." White bully turned to the proprietor: "Do you allow your customers to be abused like this?" "Why you overgrown cowardly cur, you came in here to bullygag and abuse the negro. He has apologized like a gentleman, and now offers you satisfaction. Go out and get it." He got it.

The government method prescribed for cleaning brass, and in use at all the United States arsenals, is claimed to be the best in the world. The plan is to make a mixture of one part common nitric acid and one half part sulphuric acid in a stone jar, having also ready a pail of fresh water and a box of sawdust. The articles to be treated are dipped into the acid, then removed into the water, and finally rubbed with sawdust. This immediately changes them to a brilliant color. If the brass has become greasy, it is first dipped in a strong solution of potash and soda in warm water; this cuts the grease so, that the acid has free power to act.

If all drinking should cease jails could be rented for ware-rooms, and poor-houses would have to advertise for boarders. It is true that the poor saloonists and sample-room keepers would have a hard time, but it would be overbalanced by the good time that would come to millions of homes where would be heard loving voices instead of curses and blows and sobs of wives and children.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"How much quinine can you take at once?" inquired one malarious individual of another as they met on the street this morning. "Oh, not more'n about four grains. If I take any more it sets my head to working." "Does it? I should think you would take six grains twice a day."

A proper remedy for a young lady who is short of stature is to get spliced as soon as possible.

The Message of the Rose.

HE.

She gave me a rose at the ball to-night,
And I—I'm a fool, I suppose,
For my heart beat high with a vague delight:
Had she given me more than the rose?

I thought that she had, for a little while,
Till I saw her—fairest of dancers—
Give another rose, with the same sweet smile,
To another man, in the Lancers.

Well, roses are plenty and smiles not rare;
It is really rather audacious
To grumble because my lady fair
Is to other men kind and gracious.

Yet who can govern his wayward dreams?
And my dream, so precious and bright,
Now foolish, broken, and worthless seems,
As it fades, with her rose, to-night.

SHE.

I gave him a rose at the ball to-night—
A deep red rose, with fragrance dim,
And the warm blood rushed to my cheeks with fright—
I could not, dared not, look at him.

For the depths of my soul he seemed to scan;
His earnest look I could not bear,
So I gave a rose to another man—
Any one else—I did not care.

And yet, spite of all, he has read, I know,
My message—he could not have missed it;
For his rose I held to my bosom, so,
And then to my lips, while I kissed it.

THE WIFE.

I have often had occasion to mark the fortitude with which women bear the most overwhelming reverses of fortune. Those disasters which break down the spirit of man, and prostrate him in the dust, seem to call forth all the energies of the sex and give such intrepidity and elevation to her character, that at times it approaches to sublimity. Nothing can be more touching than to behold a soft and tender female, who had been all weakness and dependence, and alive to every trivial roughness while treading the prosperous paths of life, suddenly rising in mental force to be the comfort and support of her husband under misfortune, and abiding with unshaken firmness the most bitter blast of adversity. As a vine, which has long been lifted into sunshine, will, when the hardy plant is rifted by the thunder-bolt, cling around it with its caressing tendrils and bind up the shattered boughs; so is it ordered by Providence that woman, who is the mere dependent and ornament of man in his happier hours, should be his stay and solace when smitten with sudden calamity; winding herself into the rugged recesses of his nature, tenderly supporting the drooping head, and binding up the broken heart. I was once congratulating a friend, who had around him a blooming family, knit together in the strongest affection. 'I can wish you no better lot,' said he with enthusiasm, 'than to have a wife and children. If you are prosperous, there they are to share your prosperity; if otherwise, they are there to comfort you.' And, indeed, I have observed that a married man falling into misfortune is more apt to retrieve his situation in the world than a single one; partly because he is more stimulated to exertion by the necessities of the helpless and beloved beings who depend upon him for subsistence, but chiefly because his spirit and self-respect are kept alive by finding that though all abroad is darkness and humiliation, yet there is still a little world of love at home, of which he is the monarch. Whereas, a single man is apt to run to waste and self-neglect; to fancy himself lonely and abandoned, and his heart to fall to ruin, like some deserted mansion, for want of inhabitant.—Washington Irving.

Man is the child of his own deeds, and the lazy man deserves to be an orphan.

Some men cannot stand prosperity. Others never get a chance to try.

HOW CIGARETTES ARE MADE.

I ran across a cigarette factory the other day. Whew! I wouldn't write—or, rather, you wouldn't dare print what I saw. Dirty butts of cigars fresh from the filth of the muddy streets are the cleanest of the material used in compiling these precious roads to ruin. I came down town on a Madison avenue car this evening, and on the tail end there were three little chaps, the oldest about fourteen. Each smoked a cigarette and spat his little life away. I ventured to ask if they enjoyed the odor. They said they did.

And the taste? Certainly. On inquiring I found they had a well known brand of cigarettes, noted for the "opium soak" and its terrible smell when burning. Poor little devils. They can't last long. They were pale and sickly, puny and offensive. What kind of men will they make? Men? They're men already in their own eyes. They and a majority of our little lads are full of the slang of the day, up in all the catches and abundantly able to hold up their end of a conversation. I subsequently saw these three boys in Niblo's Garden. It would have done you good to hear them talk. A blind man might reasonably think he was talking to three old men. Nothing was new. They had seen it all before, and better done at that. Down went the curtain, out went the boys, but before they felt the first breath of fresh air from the street each puny hand held a cigarette to the vile smelling mouth and puff! puff! they sickened everybody in their vicinity. This is an old grievance of mine, and I don't care to bore you with it, but I feel it keenly. Day by day the vice grows stronger. There was a time when cigarette smoking was confined almost entirely to Cubans, who knew what good tobacco was and made their own cigarettes. Gradually the habit spread. Dealers follow suit. Makers become unscrupulous. Little dirty boys were sent out to pick up cigar stumps. Other equally disgusting material was also utilized. Opium was made to do duty. Cheap paper took the place of rice paper. I wish these boys could see the stuff their paper is made from. Wouldn't it turn their little stomachs? I trow, trow. The cheap paper, the old stumps, the opium and the chemicals used to make them "strong" deserve to be shown up. Parents have no influence with their sons. Why not? Because they smoke cigars or pipes themselves. The boys charge all good advice they get to their fathers' desire to keep them down. There is but one way to deal with American boys. Reason with them through their eyes. If every nicotined stomach was made public, if every time a fellow died of too much cigarette the fact was made known, if the proud boys could be shown a rag factory and a stump grinder, it seems to me the cigarette business would be wound up very soon.—N. Y. Correspondent Hartford Post.

INDIAN MAIDENS.

Among the Northwestern tribes of Indians, says the Montreal Star, innocence is as marked among the girls as their color. The impression that the red maiden does not entertain a high standard of morality is an error, for she is taught as other girls are, and grows up with well-developed ideas of the responsibilities of life and a firm resolution to discharge them. Educated in the faith that she was ordained to work, she trains herself to undergo hard labor, and at 16 years of age is sturdy and strong, brave against fatigue, and a perfect housewife. She may not possess the New England notions of cleanliness, but she takes not a little pride in her personal appearance, and in the arrangement of her lodge she displays some crude ideas of taste and a certain amount of neatness. If she marries a white man, she makes him a good wife as long as she lives with him. His home is her sole comfort, and his comfort her sole ambition. She thinks of him and for him, and makes it her study to please him and make him respect and love her. She recognizes in him one of a superior race, and by her dignity and devotion endears herself to him and struggles to make him happy. At the agencies of the upper frontier thousands of men are employed, and it is not an exaggeration to say that the majority of them have Indian wives and live happily. They are not sought after by the maidens, for the Indian girl's custom is to remain quiet until after the marriage contract is made and the marriage portion paid over. The husband must have the dowry, with which he must invest his projected mother-in-law before the ceremony takes place. The process is a little out of the usual run, and a description may be of interest. The aspiring bridegroom must be well known in the tribe before he can hope to win a wife. Her people want to thoroughly understand him and know if he can support not only her, but also her relatives, in the event of a pinch. He must be a kind-hearted man, with a temper warranted to keep, in any domestic climate, and he must have a good lodge, and at least half a dozen horses. If he be, and have all these, he can a-wooing go. Selecting the lady, he makes application to her mother, and, at a council, the price is fixed upon. If the girl be especially pretty, her mother will demand a gun, two horses and a lot of provisions, blankets and cloth. A gun is valued at $50, a horse at $20, and he must furnish material to bring the amount up to from $100 to $150. Then he tries to beat the dame down, and if he succeeds, he knows there is some reason for letting the girl go; if not he understands that he is making a good choice. The courtship is left entirely to the mother.

The Chief Justice of the Irish Common Pleas, who is known as 'Moichy Morris,' and who owes his present position to the fact that Disraeli, being anxious to place a Roman Catholic on the bench, was unable to find another of Tory politics, is gifted with a rare and rich Galway brogue, which gave much amusement to the House of Commons during the short time he was there. Recently a young junior rose timidly to make his first motion in court, who possessed a hard northern brogue, between which and the western there is a wide distinction. 'Sapel,' said the Judge, leaning over to his clerk in court, 'hew is that fallah?' 'His name is Hammond, my lord.' A pause. 'Sapel, fhaat part of the coonthry does he come from?' 'From County Donegal, my lord.' Another pause. 'Sapel, did yez iver coome across sich a froightful accint in the whole coorse of yer loife?'

'I can't get up early,' said a poor victim to his doctor. 'Oh, yes you can,' was the reply, 'if you will only follow my advice. What is your hour of rising?' 'Nine o'clock.' 'Well, get up half an hour later every day, and in the course of a month you will find yourself up at 4 in the morning.'

The Journal.

SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1882.

THE Massachusetts Central Railroad is hard up again, and a meeting of stockholders and bondholders was held at Boston Thursday to see about raising a million or so more of money with which to complete the road. A committee of seven was appointed to investigate the affairs of the corporation, and report at an adjourned meeting June 1.

THE President approved the new anti-Chinese bill on Monday, and it will go into effect August 6th. This bill prohibits the immigration of Chinese laborers to this country for ten years, but permits those now here to come and go under certain regulations, though they cannot become citizens. It is a measure which seems strangely inconsistent with the spirit of our institutions, but it will satisfy the Pacific coast, for a while at least, and time will demonstrate its wisdom or unwisdom.

THE last sad chapter in the history of the Jeannette's voyage in search of the mysteries of the Arctic regions was completed last Saturday, by the reception of the intelligence that the dead bodies of Capt. De Long and ten men had been found at the mouth of the Lena. The news is also received that 30 of the 37 persons on board the Rodgers, sent in search of the Jeanette and recently burned in the Arctic ocean, were lost. The whole history of these Arctic expeditions is a terrible tragedy from beginning to end, and it will be well for humanity if it ends here.

JUSTICE is coming tardily to the aid of Gen. Fitz John Porter, who was cashiered in January, 1863, and disqualified from ever holding any office under the government. In view of the doubts that have arisen as to his guilt of the offenses charged against him, the President has remitted the continuous portion of his sentence, and it now remains for Congress to reward his persistent efforts by restoring him to the position from which he seems to have been unjustly removed. There ought certainly to be no further delay in giving his claims a full and careful consideration.

LAWYER SCOVILLE, who conducted Guiteau's defense, and received only abuse and curses for it, is suffering much domestic unhappiness, as a further result of the trial. His wife recently left home and seemed to have become estranged from him. He has only seen her once in several weeks, and brought suit this week against her brother, John W. Guiteau, who he claimed was keeping her away from him, but abandoned proceedings upon being informed by telegraph that she was back in Chicago. If she is in fact insane, as he thinks she is, Mr. Scoville will reap a sad reward for his devotion to her brother's cause.

SOUTHBRIDGE has a fatherly board of selectmen, who have voted to limit the number of shows in that town to an average of one each week for the coming year, in order to reduce the temptation to foolishly squander money. Their action would seem to indicate that there are a good many people there with spendthrift proclivities so largely developed as not to be able to judge for themselves what they can afford to spend for entertainments, and they are fortunate in having town fathers who will look after them. Up this way managers would be glad if they could feel sure of a paying house on an average of even once in two weeks.

OUR State Senate votes against removing the State prison from Concord, and appropriates $46,000 for improvements and repairs at the prison. The House has defeated the bill restricting liquor licenses to one for each 1000 people, and has voted to abolish what is left of the school district system. The committee on redistricting the State has reported its plan, which makes one Democratic and eleven Republican districts. The present 11th district becomes the 12th, the only change being the setting off of Brimfield, Wales and Holland to the new 10th district. The old 10th district becomes the 11th, and is only changed by the setting off of Clinton. The population of the districts varies but little.

LORD CAVENDISH, the newly appointed chief secretary of Ireland, and Thomas Henry Burke, under secretary, were assassinated about 7 o'clock last Saturday evening in Dublin. They were taking a walk in Phœnix park, when a car drove up containing four men, two of whom jumped down, stabbed them several times in the throat and breast, and then drove off, the bodies of their victims being discovered soon after by some bicyclists. The greatest excitement prevailed in Dublin and throughout Ireland as soon as the deed became known, and Irishmen everywhere denounced the shocking crime. Coming as it did at a time when the government had just changed its repressive policy for one of conciliation, it is hard to understand the motive for a resort to assassination, especially as the murdered chief secretary had always been a liberal, and a friend of the Irish. There is no clew to the assassins, but every effort is being made to unearth them, and large rewards are offered for their apprehension, several thousand dollars being offered for this purpose by Irish-Americans.

The outlook for Western cattle growers is reported as exceedingly flattering. The average loss of cattle during the winter was 4 per cent, against 9 per cent last year, and the condition of the cattle is 20 per cent better than usual. Grass is more forward, especially in the Southwest. The shipments will be 10 per cent more than last year; prices average $4.25 per head more, and there is no disease anywhere.

Several Fall River manufacturers have been swindled out of a quantity of cotton, worth some $60,000, by a dealer in Columbus, Miss.

Ryan's circus gave an unpretentious but quite excellent exhibition last Saturday, the performers all displaying more than usual merit and skill in their various acts. There was only a small audience in the afternoon, but the seats were well filled in the evening. Over a hundred children from the State Primary School were present in the afternoon, and the managers generously invited them to remain to the concert and also treated them to a supply of candy.

It is reported that the Boston & Albany Railroad will introduce at this place the interlocking signal system which has been in successful use at South Framingham for a month past, in order that its fast express may pass this station and the New London Northern Railroad crossing without stopping. How will our people like this? It would be a new experience, and not a very welcome one, we imagine, for our citizens to see a passenger train go by this station without stopping.

The order to stop trains at all railroad crossings with the hand brake, which has been in force on the Boston & Albany road since the Westinghouse air brakes failed to work once when a train was approaching the New London Northern crossing here, several years ago, has been rescinded, and the power brake is now used for all stops. The automatic brake now in use is found to be very reliable, and as it applies itself at once when anything is out of order, it can be depended upon at all times.

Is our improvement association on its "last legs," after an existence of only one year? Three attempts have recently been made to hold a meeting of the executive committee, but no quorum has been present on either occasion. We believe the association has a little money on hand to be expended on cross-walks, and it was also to do something about putting up street signs. Now is the time to be doing things in this line, and we hope the association will be awake to its opportunities and duties.

For some little time residents on Park street and in that vicinity have been aware that somebody was prowling around their houses on dark nights, but they were never able to get hold of the intruder. Section Master McQuaid has been especially annoyed, and has been on the alert for some time. After several fruitless attempts to capture the fellow, he found him peering into his windows Monday night and "nabbed" him. It proved to be Charles Converse, a molder who has been employed in the foundry for a few months. His boots just fitted the tracks around the house, and finding himself cornered he acknowledged his guilt, but was let off on promising to leave town at once, which he did the next morning.

Landlord Weeks is making some alterations and improvements in the interior of the Weeks House. He has added a second story to the wash-room ell, making a comfortable sleeping room for some of his help, while the two sleeping rooms back of the office are being fixed up for a wash room, with set bowls, and a barber's shop, for the accommodation of his guests. The old privy in the rear of the hotel has been removed, and a neat new one put in its place, while a water closet for ladies has been put in on the second floor. As soon as the changes are completed, Mr. Weeks proposes to newly paint and paper the parlor, hall, office, etc. The foundations for his new barn are nearly completed, and work will soon begin on the superstructure.

Fire was discovered in the room over the blacksmith department of Tuthill's carriage factory, a little after 4 o'clock Tuesday morning. An alarm was given, and the flames were soon extinguished with a few pails of water. It was found that the lower sash of a window had been broken out, and a fire started in an old carriage, and also in a pile of papers and refuse in another part of the room. The latter died out of itself, but the body and upper part of the carriage were pretty well consumed, and the flames had just begun to work on the roof when discovered, and would doubtless have been beyond control in a few minutes more. The Boston & Albany Railroad switch house at Tenneyville was burned a short time before the discovery of this fire, and it is thought probable that both were set by tramps passing through on the railroad.

The Grand Army Post are arranging for an appropriate observance of Decoration Day in town, on the 30th inst. Their plans are not yet perfected, but in a general way are as follows: The Post will assemble at the Nassowanno House in the forenoon, and proceed to Three Rivers, where the graves of soldiers will be decorated, with the assistance of the school children. A similar service will then be performed at the cemetery at Four Corners, and the Catholic cemetery, and the Post will then return to this place, being met at the cemetery by the school children. After decorating the graves here, the members of the Post and invited guests will partake of a collation in the parlors of the Universalist church, and in the afternoon an oration will be delivered in Wales Hall by Rev. E. A. Perry, pastor of St. Paul's church, and an old soldier. Music for the day will be furnished by the Palmer Cornet Band.

The following business was transacted at a session of the probate court held in this town on Tuesday: Administration granted on estates of—Marcus H. Smith of Brimfield, Elijah Allen administrator; George A. Hunt of Palmer, Chas. L. Gardner administrator; Esther F. Robbins of Monson, Chas. F. Robbins administrator; Mary E. Sullivan of West Springfield, Ellen Sullivan administratrix; Albert C. Neff of Wales, Louisa A. Neff administratrix; Ethan B. Colton of Springfield, Ambrose Colton special administrator. THE SMALL-POX.

There seems to be a disposition in some quarters to cause needless alarm in regard to the small-pox in town, by publishing magnified, false and sensational statements in regard to it, of which the following, from Monday morning's Republican, is a sample:

The small-pox situation at Palmer is already serious. The four cases at the Thorndike boarding-house, previously reported, are likely to recover. Leroy Ramsdell, who has taken care of Clark, one victim, is down with the disease at the boarding-house. James Burpee, a Thorndike mill hand, who boarded at the same house, has the small-pox at Mr. Roberts' house on the Buffington road, near Three Rivers. Burpee's wife and child live in Three Rivers and probably many have been exposed. The town officials have been grossly careless in the management of the disease. Burpee was wandering about Thorndike and finally one of the board of health took him to Roberts's house, and so the members of a large family have been exposed. Burpee's wife and child were straying about Palmer village Saturday, with no place to go and expecting to come down with the disease. It is said that the 25 persons who were removed from the Thorndike boarding-house were allowed to stop off on their way at Kelliher's saloon for a two-hours' carousal. A special town meeting should be called to consider the matter, some think.

It is perhaps enough to say that these statements are untrue in almost every particular. Within two hours from the time Burpee left the boarding-house at Thorndike, the clothing he had on was removed and buried. He was not wandering about Thorndike, and if he had been could not have communicated the disease to anybody. A member of the board of health made two or three efforts to find a place for him, to allay people's fears, and finally arranged with Mr. Roberts to take him. Both Mr. Roberts and his wife have had the small-pox, and their children have been successfully vaccinated. Burpee was there two or three days before the disease manifested itself at all, and he only has the varioloid in a very mild form. Mrs. Burpee was not "straying about Palmer village," "with no place to go to," though she may have been here. She had not seen her husband for a week, but has been caring for a sick son at the Center, and as she has had the small-pox it is difficult to see how she was "expecting to come down with the disease," without being exposed, even. In regard to the "carousal" at Thorndike—there simply was none. A man was hired to take the people from the boarding-house to the house east of the Center, where they have been quarantined. On the way the driver went into the saloon and got a bottle of wine, and one or two went in and had a single drink of liquor. We make these statements on the authority of members of the board of health, and others familar with the facts.

The simple facts are that in this town of some 6000 inhabitants there have been in all seven cases of small-pox or varioloid, in three different buildings, all but one case being in the same village. None of the cases have proved fatal, those who were exposed were promptly quarantined, and every possible precaution has been taken to prevent any further spread of the disease. The town has no pest house, to be sure, as it ought to have, though even if there had been one the first victims were too sick when it was decided that they had the small-pox, to be removed; and under the circumstances the authorities have done the best that they could. There is of course occasion for watchfulness and care to prevent the pest from spreading, but we fail to see that the situation is "serious," or that there is any cause for alarm.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

C. H. Haskell, who recently sold his farm near Glendale, has removed to Peabody.

WEST WARREN.

The land league held an indignation meeting Wednesday evening to express their "horror and detestation of the last act of the assassins in Ireland."

J. D. Rood has resigned his position as station agent, on account of poor health, and is succeeded by R. H. King of Springfield.

Peter Byron, a French boy employed in No. 2 mill, broke a leg Wednesday in attempting to shift a belt with his foot.

James Collins succeeds J. F. Williams as overseer of spinning in No. 3 mill, the latter having removed to Manchester, N. H.

WARREN.

The old white hen has got two chickens.

M. W. Watrous has opened a new tin shop in town.

Spring to all appearances has come, and the farmers are busy.

The Geo. F. Blake Mfg. Co. have bought the I. Comins homestead for $358.

The Methodist church is nearly ready for occupation. Noted speakers from abroad are expected at the dedication.

WALES.

James E. Hubbard is the juror drawn Tuesday night.

Farmers complain that grass starts very slowly this spring, and hardly any have turned out their cattle.

The farm and personal property of the late Parley G. Green will be sold at auction to-day at 10 o'clock a. m.

State Detective Buxton visited the mills last week, looking after the children employed in them. He found all satisfactory.

H. A. McFarland has been commissioned a notary public for Hampden County, and is now prepared to put his seal on such papers as may come under the class requiring one.

Abbie T. Goggin was arrested last Saturday night, taken to Palmer, and sentenced to pay a fine of $150 and costs for illegal sales of liquor. She appealed, and for lack of funds went to jail. Her husband fled to Connecticut, leaving her behind to fight her own battles.

BRIMFIELD.

James S. Blair has been drawn as juror for the May term of the superior court.

Henry F. Brown, who has held the office of postmaster for 15 years, announces his purpose to resign the same soon.

Albert S. Prouty, who recently purchased of A. W. Crossman the Linus Homer mill property, in the northwest part of the town, has sold the same to John W. Lawrence of Warren, who proposes to repair the grist mill and run the same for the benefit of himself and neighbors.

Much interest is manifested by antiquarians and relic hunters in the auction sale, May 13th, of the estate of Harriet Allen, lately deceased, consisting of the farm, stock, household furniture, etc. The farm is said to be a part of the tract of 1000 acres, lying in Brimfield and Sturbridge, granted to John Elliot, the apostle to the Indians, and has been occupied by the family for about 100 years, and much of the furniture is said to be the same owned by Elijah Allen, the first occupant.

THREE RIVERS.

Dr. Wm. E. Holbrook has been appointed town physician.

Roscoe S. Milliken and wife have returned from Europe, after an absence of about ten months.

Rev. F. B. Joyce of South Yarmouth preaches as a candidate at the Baptist church to-morrow.

Bethel Chapter, Golden Rule Alliance, initiated five new members Monday evening, and expect other accessions soon.

The new hotel is nearly completed, and will be open to the public soon. Landlord P. H. Rochford has been granted a license to sell intoxicating liquors, and will, it is said, carry the business on in a respectable (?) manner.

N. K. Rogers is improving the basement of his house on East Main street, by putting in a door and windows on the side next the street. When completed it will be occupied by Heath & Shaw, for a market. They will still carry on the grocery business at their old stand.

The many rumors current in regard to the small-pox, such as that the Roberts children were attending school, that Mr. Roberts came to the village stores, etc., etc., all prove to be without foundation upon investigation. The case is making business for the doctors. Dr. Wm. E. Holbrook alone has vaccinated about 300 persons.

Building business seems to be good this Spring. Capt. Potter is building two new houses on the Palmer road, Dr. Ruggles is building on the east side, John F. Twiss is putting in the foundation for the addition to the school house, which is to be built this Summer, and the Otis Company have commenced work on six two-tenement houses on School street, and will probably put up other buildings during the season.

THORNDIKE.

The new barn of the Thorndike Company, built upon the former site, is a great improvement on the old one.

Since the setting up of the new machinery in the addition of the cloth room, work nights has been discontinued.

We are to be favored this year with but one drinking saloon, thanks to the good judgment of our authorities.

The Congregational Sunday school failed to reorganize last Sunday, because of the unusually small attendance.

Edward Wilson is building a new barn, and many other minor changes are being made in different parts of the village.

The preaching services at the Congregational church are changed from 1 p. m. to 10.45 a. m. The summer arrangment will continue till November.

The Methodist society have repaired their parsonage for the new incumbent, Rev. Mr. Matthews, who arrived this week with his family. Mr. Matthews found the table loaded with provisions, showing the good will of his excellent people.

Geo. W. Keith has in charge a very fine four-years-old stallion named "Donald," remarkable for size and beauty. The stock is Sampson, color black, and he stands 17 hands high, and when shipped from Indiana last week weighed 1704 pounds. His immediate pedigree is Brocton, sire (Sampson,) and Duchess of Norfolk (part Clidesdale) dam. Donald has been the center of great attraction since his arrival. An opportunity is thus afforded for introducing a superior stock of draught horses.

It would be difficult to find a gloomier place than this has been for the past few weeks. A large proportion of our people are seldom seen upon the streets. The common topic of conversation in all quarters is small-pox, the fear of which is far more prevalent and disastrous than the actual disease. The result of the excitement has made merchants, ministers and school teachers rather unpopular. The disease has doubtless reached its climax, as no new cases have been reported since Sunday, and all are doing well. Since the Clark boy was taken, the public schools have been closed. During the two weeks' intermission the rooms will be whitewashed and thoroughly cleansed.

MONSON.

The assessors are interviewing the tax payers.

There will be preaching at Central Hall at 4.30 p. m. next Sabbath.

Nineteen persons were received into the Congregational church last Sabbath.

W. A. Deichmann has the cellar wall all in for his Hampden Court dwelling house.

Joshua Tracy has the addition to the Frank King store well under way, and it presents quite a bold front, and a great improvement on the corner.

The Linophilians will hold an open society next Wednesday evening at 7.30 o'clock, in Academy Hall. All interested in the society are cordially invited to be present.

Chas. H. Robbins has sold his hotel, the Monson House, to Alfred D. Cady of Eastford, Ct. Mr. Robbins proposes to close out his livery stock at auction next week Saturday.

Now that Selectman Potter has charge of the roads in district No. 1 north, it is to be hoped that the mealy roads of the past years will be so hardened as to be decently passable at least.

William Puffer, a long time resident of Monson, died last Sunday night. He had been for several months a great sufferer from a cancer. He was a highly esteemed citizen, was once representative to the general court, and selectman. He was step-father of Mrs. C. L. Gardner of Palmer.

Geo. W. Burdick has recently been favored with an addition to his stock, having a female dog which presented him with fourteen pups at one litter, thirteen of which were dog pups. They are of the Newfoundland breed, all are healthy, and "mother and children doing as well as could be expected." Mr. B. has also recently purchased another trotter, and won't be bothered with dust from vehicles ahead.

Our streets have presented a lively appearance during the last week, with Newton's "Curiosities from the ocean," a big dry goods auction at Central Hall, a lively auction sale of standard and miscellaneous books at the auction rooms, a traveling street soap vender, the evening meetings at the Catholic and other churches, etc. Taken all together, it has given our streets almost a city-like appearance.

Deacon George A. Converse, who died at Somersville, Conn., May 4, was the son of Deacon Marquis Converse of Brimfield, and was born June 24, 1827. In 1849 he came to Monson as clerk in the store of the late Albert Norcross, and was later in the store of Wm. B. Converse. In 1854 he entered the counting room of the Hampden Cotton Manufacturing Company, and there rendered efficient service for fifteen years. In 1867 he was elected to the Legislature, to represent the 1st district, comprising the towns of Monson, Brimfield, Holland and Wales. In 1869 he removed to Somersville, Conn., becoming partner in the manufacturing firm of S. C. Reynolds & Co. From the commencement of his Christan life in 1858 he was recognized as an earnest, true and faithful man. He was largely instrumental in organizing a Congregational church in Somersville in 1871, to which he rendered cheerful and willing help as deacon, chorister, superintendent of Sabbath school and society treasurer. In 1873 he was chosen representative from Somers in the Connecticut Legislature, showing himself in this duty, as in every other, a good and true man, and commanding the universal respect and confidence of the community. In the Spring of 1878 he retired from active business. During the summer of '78, hereditary and fatal disease developed itself, and compelled him to bear for the remainder of his life a great weight of infirmity. In all these years of suffering there was seen the light of a Christian courage and endurance, and of the clear hope of the believer, who knows whom he has believed. A wise but mysterious Providence removes him prematurely, as men say, at the age of 55, the very prime of life, from a church and community whose universal affection and confidence he shared as few men are loved and trusted, and from a sphere of usefulness and Christian influence which no other can fill. Nevertheless, "he being dead yet speaketh." His children rise up and call him blessed. The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance. Mr. Converse leaves a wife and four children. C. L. A.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Major Henry Winn of Greenfield will deliver the address on Decoration Day, and the high school pupils will trim the monument as usual.

The annual meeting of the fire district, on Monday, was largely attended. It was voted to pay the Oregon Engine Co. $420, officers of the department $90, for new hose $200, and to raise $2800 to pay the indebtedness of the district. The old engine is to be repaired, and extra hosemen engaged to manage it. It was voted not to purchase a hook and ladder truck this year. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Chief Engineer, Thomas C. Gleason; assistants, Myron Ramsdell, E. A. Aldrich, Aram Warburton, Frank Ward; clerk, Charles E. Blood; treasurer, Otis Lane; prudential committee, F. P. Clark, Phillip Keefe, George Gould.

The inquest which has been in session the past four weeks, on the body of Mrs. Ellen Maguire, has returned a verdict of accidental drowning or suicide. A large number of witnesses were separately and privately examined. The testimony of the Drs. Miner showed that the eyes were closed tightly, the hands clenched, one part of the heart in normal condition, and no water on the lungs. Although these indications would be expected in a body dead before being placed in the water, still medical testimony showed that it might be possible in a case of suicide. There were no bruises or signs of violence upon the body, and no marks that could not be accounted for in the handling of the body in its decayed condition upon its being removed from the water.

A CARD.—As I find myself the recipient of much undue credit (?) I hereby disclaim all participation in, or knowledge of, the authorship of the lines entitled "Off to the Poor-House," which appeared in the JOURNAL of May 6th. I wish it understood that I neither indulge in doubting quotations of Scriptural promise, nor in covert abuse of any person, church or society; nor do I write for publication any article to which I am afraid or ashamed to affix my whole name.

HELEN F. BLISS.

Monson, Mass., May 8, 1882.

MISHAPS AND MISDEEDS.—A scaffolding on the new Connecticut River Railroad bridge near Greenfield broke last week Friday, precipitating 6 men a distance of 64 feet, and injuring them seriously.—A freight and passenger train collided between New Hampton and Ashland, N. H. on Monday, killing two men.—John Goody, a Frenchman, fell 30 feet at East Longmeadow on Monday, receiving fatal injuries on the rocks.—Capt. F. B. Ames, a Bangor, Me., ship owner, killed himself and wife at New York, Monday; and on Tuesday a Boston woman, deserted by her husband, murdered one of her children and attempted to kill three others and herself. Insanity in both cases.

This Boycotting business is a thing that two can play at, as is being found out by the Irish at Turner's Falls who Boycotted G. L. Rist, a merchant there, because of his action on the McMillen grand jury at Greenfield. The Protestants are now withdrawing their patronage from all the Irish dealers, of whom there are a number, and there are rumors of Irishmen being supplanted by Americans in the paper mills.

FIRES.—There was a disastrous fire at Racine, Wis., last week Friday night, which destroyed over 44 buildings and 10,000,000 feet of lumber, the loss amounting to about $750,000.——The court house at Pittsburg, Penn., was burned on Sunday, at a loss of $200,000.

A CARD.—Dr. J. K. Warren and family wish to acknowledge their appreciation and express their gratitude for the many expressions of kindness and sympathy which they have received since his injury. J. K. WARREN.

THE STEINWAY PIANO

IS THE

STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE

Facts, say the professors, are obtained by the concurrent opinion of the largest number of best able to judge. This principle applies to the Steinway pianos, as the largest number of people pronounce them to be the best, and the firm is doing the largest volume of business of any piano-making concern in the world. Purchasers, by paying $75, $100, $150, $200 or $300 more, according to the style, for them than for any other pianos; dealers, by comparing every other piano with them; makers, by putting their pianos below them in price, and then claiming that they are pretty nearly as good, because they "have some of Steinway's workmen," or "foreman from Steinway's," or "use Steinway's scales," etc., all proclaim that

THE STEINWAY

IS THE ACKNOWEDGED STANDARD PIANO,

Not only in this country, but also in Europe it stands as far ahead of all other pianos as it does in America.

This fact being established that the Steinway is the best, of course the next best is that which is nearest like it, which purchasers can decide for themselves by listening and comparing with the standard.

IN THE WHOLE HISTORY OF MEDICINE

No preparation has ever performed such marvellous cures, or maintained so wide a reputation, as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which is recognized as the world's remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs. Its long-continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it universally known as a safe and reliable agent to employ. Against ordinary colds, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders, it acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering, and often saving life. The protection it affords, by its timely use in throat and chest disorders, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. From their knowledge of its composition and operation, physicians use the CHERRY PECTORAL extensively in their practice, and clergymen recommend it. It is absolutely certain in its healing effects, and will always cure where cures are possible.

A School Incident.

How dear to my heart is the school I attended,
And how I remember, so distant and dim,
That red headed Bill, and the pin that I bended
And carefully put on the bench under him!
And how I recall the surprise of the master
When Bill gave a yell, and sprang up with the pin
So high that his bullet head bursted the plaster
Above, and the scholars all set up a grin.
That active boy, Billy, that high-leaping Billy!
That loud-shouting Billy that sat on a pin!

—San Francisco News Letter.

THE PAPER WE USE.

Paper car wheels are composed entirely of paper rings pressed together under a weight of six tons, and then fastened by means of bolts, and steel tires put on them, when they are ready for use. Laid loosely the rings stack as high as the shoulders of an ordinary man. Under treatment they sink to the thickness required. If the tire should wear or fall off the wheel, or the train run from the track, there would be no danger of their breaking, as they are very flexible and would spring.

A paper ball can be rendered so solid that nothing but a diamond tool can cause an indentation into it. At the mill is a square block of compressed paper fastened on a turning-lathe and so hard that if a fine steel chisel is held against it when it is moving, instead of cutting the paper it will break the chisel into a hundred pieces. The strength is astonishing. You can take a £5 note of the Bank of England, twist it into a kind of rope, suspend 339 pounds upon one end of it, and not injure it in the slightest degree.

Bath-tubs and pots are formed by compressing the paper made out of linen fibres and annealed—that is, painted with a composition which becomes a part thereof and is fireproof. The tubs last indefinitely, never leak, and put in the fire, will not burn up. You can beat on them with a hammer and not injure them.

Plates compressed and annealed are very durable. You can not only wash them, but drop them upon the floor and stand upon them. The fork can be used for any practical purpose, and the knife can always be kept sharp.

Paper can be substituted for wood, converted into picture frames and colored like walnut, cherry, and the like. Bedsteads are fashioned the same as car wheels, only of long strips instead of rings. They are very beautiful and lasting. Cooking or heating stoves are also annealed, and it is impossible to burn them out. They are less costly than iron. A house can literally be constructed of and furnished with every convenience in paper.

EXCELSIOR.

Longfellow wrote the following letter to C. K. Tuckerman many years ago, and it has just found its way into print in the London Telegraph. It gives a new delight to the poem "Excelsior."

"I have had the pleasure of receiving your note in regard to the poem 'Excelsior,' and very willingly give you my intention in writing it. This was no more than to display, in a series of pictures, the life of a man of genius, resisting all temptations, laying aside all fears, heedless of all warnings, and pressing right on to accomplish his purpose. His motto is excelsior—'higher.' He passes through the Alpine village—through the rough, cold paths of the world—where the peasants cannot understand him, and where his watchword is an 'unknown tongue.' He disregards the happiness of domestic peace and sees the glaciers—his fate—before him. He disregards the warnings of the old man's wisdom and the fascination of woman's love. He answers to all, 'Higher yet!' The monks of St. Bernard are the representatives of religious forms and ceremonies, and with their oft-repeated prayer mingles the sound of his voice, telling them there is something higher than forms or ceremonies. Filled with these aspirations he perishes without having reached the perfection he longed for; and the voice heard in the air is the promise of immortality and progress ever upward. You will perceive that 'excelsior,' an adjective of the comparative degree, is used adverbially; a use justified by the best Latin writers. I remain, very truly yours,

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW."

A clergyman was preparing his discourse for Sunday, stopping occasionally to review what he had written, and to erase that which he was disposed to disapprove, when he was accosted by his little son who numbered but five summers: 'Father, does God tell you what to preach?' 'Certainly, my child.' 'Then what makes you scratch it out?'

Dr. Charles Jewett, while arguing for prohibition, once said, 'Why not pour the rum into the gutter? It is destined to the gutter at last. Why not pour it there at once, and not wait to strain it through a man, and spoil the strainer in the work?'

It is estimated that there are 10,000,000 men under arms in Europe at the present time, and that the annual cost, direct and indirect, of these enormous forces, is not less than $2,840,000,000.

'Yes,' said a lady, complacently, 'I expect we'll get rich now. My husband has just been appointed one of the receivers of an embarrassed savings bank'.—Somerville Journal.

It is said by a poultry raiser that a few sprigs of cedar mixed with hay or other material for hen's nests will keep the the fowls entirely free from lice.

Clear head and voice, easy breathing, sweet breath, perfect smell, taste and hearing, no cough, no distress. These are conditions brought about in catarrh by the use of Sanford's Radical Cure Complete treatment for $1. m

Terrible itching and scaly humors, ulcers, sores and scrofulous swellings cured by the Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) externally, and Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) internally. Ask about them at your druggists. m

CUTICURA,

THE NEW BLOOD PURIFIER RESOLVENT.

I will now state that I made a miraculous cure of one of the worst cases of skin disease known. The patient is a man forty years old; had suffered fifteen years. His eyes, scalp and nearly his whole body presented a frightful appearance. Had had the attention of twelve different physicians, who prescribed the best remedies known to the profession, such as iodide potassium, arsenic, corrosive sublimate, sarsaparilla, etc. Had paid $500 for medical treatment with but little relief. I prevailed upon him to use the CUTICURA RESOLVENT internally, and the CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally. He did so, and was completely cured. The skin on his head, face, and many other parts of his body, which presented a most loathsome appearance, is now as soft and smooth as an infant's, with no scar or trace of the disease left behind. He has now been cured twelve months.

Reported by
F. H. BROWN, Esq., Barnwell, S. C.

SCROFULA SORE.

Rev. Dr. ——, in detailing his experience with the CUTICURA REMEDIES said that through Divine Providence one of his parishoners was cured of a scrofulous sore, which was slowly draining away his life, by the CUTICURA RESOLVENT internally, and CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally. The poison that had fed the disease was completely driven out.

ECZEMA.

Sixteen months since an eruption broke out on my leg and both feet, which turned out to be Eczema, and caused me great pain and annoyance. I tried various remedies with no good results, until I used the CUTICURA RESOLVENT internally and CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally, which entirely cured me so that my skin is as smooth and natural as ever.

LEN. M. FRAILEY, 64 South St., Baltimore.

CUTICURA.

The Cuticura treatment, for the cure of Skin, Scalp and Blood diseases, consists in the internal use of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, the new blood purifier, and the external use of CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP, the great skin cures. Price of CUTICURA, small boxes, 50c.; large boxes, $1.00. CUTICURA RESOLVENT, $1.00 per bottle. CUTICURA SOAP, 25c.; CUTICURA SHAVING SOAP, 15c.

SAD ACCIDENT.

MR. OSCAR CRAIG Blown up by a Premature Blast in the Rosendale Cement Quarry—DESTRUCTION of an EYE—Its Subsequent removal by Surgical Operation.

Mr. Oscar Craig was foreman in a cement quarry at Rosendale, Ulster Co., N. Y. By an explosion one day in the quarry he lost an eye—lost it totally. Under the impression that the matter was less serious the local physician told Mr. Craig that his eye was not lost wholly, but could be saved by treatment. The experiment was tried and failed. Worse remained behind, for he was in danger of losing the other also, through sympathetic inflammation. In this strait he consulted DR. DAVID KENNEDY, of Rondout, N. Y., who told him the injured eye must be taken out to save the other. To this Mr. Craig demurred, and went back home in doubt. His local physician said: "Go to New York." To New York the patient went, and one of the most eminent oculists in the country, having looked at the case, said: "You have lost one eye entirely; go back and do what you can to save the other." Briefly, Dr. Kennedy removed the ruined eye and treated Mr. Craig with "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" to build up the system, and the result was successful.

Dr. Kennedy's success as a surgeon is due to the use of "Favorite Remedy" in the after treatment.

Are you troubled with Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Constipation or Derangement of the Kidneys and Bladder? then use Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." It will not disappoint you. Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists. 4w8

The Pump.

The old oaken bucket has figured in story,
And rivers and brooks where waterfalls jump;
But whoever gave an iota of glory
To the honest, the awkward, the homely old pump!
The honest old pump! the kindly old pump!
Though homely and awkward, we'll sing for the pump.

How grandly he stands in the quiet old street,
Though as stiff as a post and as rough as a stump,
And pours out his soul to the friends he may meet;
The glorious, the generous, the friendly old pump!
The honest old pump! the kindly old pump!
Though homely and awkward, we'll sing for the pump.

How patient and quiet he takes our rough working,
As, grasping his hand, it comes down with a thump!
No hand is more friendly, though we give it such jerking,
Than the one which we take from the faithful old pump—
The honest old pump! the kindly old pump!
Though homely and awkward, we'll sing for the pump!

He has worked hard for temperance for many long years,
And will work till rum's demon shall play his last trump;
Till his victims, all rescued, shall silence their fears,
And find their best friend in the faithful old pump—
The honest old pump! the kindly old pump!
Though homely and awkward, we'll sing for the pump!

THE HAPPIEST GIRL IN THE WORLD.

'Now girls, this won't do!' said Madame Molini, pouncing in upon the six pale sewing-girls like a wolf into a flock of lambs. 'No, it will not do at all. I don't pay you all exorbitant wages to sit and fold your hands, like fine ladies. Miss Sedgewick, we are waiting for that lavender silk polonaise. Lucy Lisle, why do you not go on with those button-holes? Miss Fox, you will be so good as to change your seat from the windows to the middle of the room at once.'

'But, madame, I can't see there to lay on these fine bias folds,' pleaded Miss Fox.

'You mean you can't see the carriages in the street, and the type-setters at the windows opposite,' retorted Madame Molini.

Lucy Lisle caught up her work.

'I stopped just a minute, madame, with that pain in my side,' she said, beginning to stitch away with eager haste.

'If you're ill,' said madame, severely, 'you had better go home and send for the doctor. While you are here your time is mine, bought and paid for.'

While Miss Sedgewick, in self-defence, urged that she had not enough silk gimp to trim the polonaise, and was waiting for more.

'Not enough,' shrilly repeated madame—'not enough! I measured that trimming myself, and I know that there is enough. You may just rip it off again, and sew it on higher up, and more economically; and I shall deduct this morning's lost time from your wages. What's that, Flora Fay—the mode-colored silk dress? Finished? And where are the two and a half yards which were left?'

'I folded them up with the dress, madam,' said Flora Fay, an innocent, blue-eyed young girl, recently from the country, who stood in an unconsciously graceful attitude before the fat and florid dressmaker.

'Then you were a goose for your pains,' shortly retorted Madam Molini, as she unfastened the parcel, abstracted the piece of glistening uncut silk, and whisked it away upon a shelf. 'Two yards and a half isn't much, but it is better than nothing.'

Flora Fay opened the innocent blue eyes wide.

'What is she going to do with it?' she asked Miss Fox, in a whisper, as madame rustled off to scold the errand-boy for putting too much coal on the fire.

'Don't you know, little silly?' whispered Miss Fox, laughing. 'It's what we call cabbage.'

'Cabbage!' repeated Flora in amazement. 'I don't understand you.'

'You will when you see the mode silk made up into a sleeveless basque for madame,' said the other, 'trimmed with the gimp that was left from Mrs. Aubrey's dinner-dress, and the pearl fringe from Mrs. Ossett's white damasse ball costume.'

'But you don't mean,' said the breathless Flora, 'that madam takes the silk that is left from the customers' dresses?'

'Goosie!' said Miss Fox, 'don't talk nonsense any longer. It's what almost every dressmaker does, and—'

'There's the reception-room bell,' shrilly called madame. 'Miss Fay, answer it at once!'

Harry Drake was standing in the pretty room, all glistening with satin drapery, gilded mouldings and huge mirrors, when Flora came in—Harry Drake, the young sea-captain, who boarded at the same quiet and inexpensive house where Flora was allowed an attic bedroom at a reasonable rate, on account of Mrs. Dobbs having once boarded a summer at the old Fay farm-house up among the Berkshire hills, and still retaining a kind recollection of Mrs Fay's kindness during an illness which overtook her there.

'Oh, Miss Fay, is it you?' said Harry. 'Do you work here? Upon my word you seem to be in very comfortable quarters.'

'But I don't stay here all the while,' said Flora, noting how his glance wandered from gilding to fresco, Axminster carpet to bronzed chandelier. 'I sew in a little dark room, where there is a stifling smell of coal gas, and no carpet on the floor.'

'I've come for a dress,' said Captain Drake, plunging headlong into his subject, after the fashion of men in general—'my sister's dress. She is to be married next week, and some of her friends coaxed her to have her dress made here. Miss Fortescue—she's only my half-sister, you know,' in answer to Flora's look of questioning surprise; 'but she's very nice, and is going to marry well, I hope.'

'It's the mode-colored dress,' said Flora, with brightening eyes. 'I helped to trim it myself. Yes, it's all ready.'

And presently madame came smiling in, with the bill and the dress folded neatly in a white pasteboard box, and Captain Drake departed with a dim idea that Madame Molini perfectly comprehended the art of high charges.

Miss Fortescue herself came the next day.

She was a young lady not lacking in quiet resolution.

She knew her rights and was prepared to defend them.

'Where is the material I sent?' said she to Miss Fox, who was in attendance in the reception-room. 'It is not all made up into the dress. I had purchased enough for a new body and sleeves, and it is not here.'

'You must be mistaken,' said Miss Fox, with an aspect of polite impassibility. 'The bias puffs and folds cut up the material shockingly, and——'

But at this moment little Flora Fay, who was packing some tulle capes and fichus into a bandbox, at the back of the room, rose and came forward with deepening color.

'There are two yards and a half of the mode-colored silk, Miss Fox,' she interrupted; 'don't you remember?—on the shelf in the back room.'

Miss Fox colored and bit her lip.

Madame Molini, with ominously-darkened face, twitched the two yards and a half of silk off the shelf, and folded it into a paper, and handed it to Miss Fortescue, muttering something about 'a mistake made by one of her young women;' and the young lady departed, a little dubious as to whether or not the fashionable dressmaker had intended to cheat her.

She had hardly closed the door behind her, however, when Molini turned upon poor Flora Fay, with a scarlet spot glowing in each cheek and lips closely compressed.

'Young woman,' said she, 'you are discharged.'

'Discharged!' echoed Flora. 'For what?'

'I want no one in my service,' said madame, 'who is too conscientious to fulfill my wishes. You have intermeddled unwarrantably in the matter of that silk, and I repeat that you are no longer in my employment!'

So poor little Flora went crying home, with a vague comprehension that she had been discharged because she had spoken out the truth.

It was nearly a fortnight afterwards that Captain Drake noticed the absence of Miss Fay from the table at the boarding-house.

'Is your little blue-eyed lodger ill, Mrs. Dobbs?' he asked. 'I don't think I have seen her of late.'

'No, she's not ill,' said the landlady. 'That is to say, not exactly ill. But she will be if she don't look out. She is boarding herself, Captain Drake, on bread and crackers, and such like, poor dear, and wasting away like a shadow, because she has lost her situation at that dressmaking place, and does not see her way clear to another. And she won't run in debt, she says, not even for a meal of victuals. Ah!' the good woman added, 'I can remember when she was the pet and darling of the old folks at home, before they lost their all—running about among the buttercups and daisies like a sunbeam.'

'But how did she come to lose her place?' asked Captain Drake.

And Mrs. Dobbs, who loved to hear the sound of her own voice, told the whole story.

'It's a shame!' cried the captain.

'Just what I said to myself,' nodded the landlady.

And the next day, Miss Fortescue (who was Mrs. Arkwright now) came to see Flora Fay.

'It was all my fault,' she said with affectionate vehemence, 'that you lost your situation—and oh, if you would only come and stay with me, and help me with the sewing for my new house, I should esteem it such a favor! Will you, please?'

'Are you quite sure that I can make myself useful?' said Flora, a little hesitatingly.

'Yes, quite,' said Mrs. Arkwright.

And in the sunny atmosphere of the bride's pretty home, the young country girl seemed to expand into a different creature.

Captain Drake, the most devoted brother in the world, came nearly every day, and little Flora, all unconscious of her own feelings, began to watch for his daily visit as a heliotrope blossom watches the sun.

Until, at last, there was talk of another long voyage to Japan, and then Flora grew pale and nervous again.

'I—I have been here long enough,' she said. 'If I try I can perhaps get a new situation. And I need change.'

But Captain Drake went straight to the root of the matter.

'Flora,' said he, 'are you unwilling that I should sail to Jeddo?'

'I always had a horror of the sea,' whispered Flora, hanging down her pretty head. 'But, of course, Captain Drake, you must do as you please.'

'Yes, of course,' he answered, absently.

And when he was gone Flora shed a few quiet tears over the table-linen she was hemming for Mrs. Arkwright.

'How bold and unmaidenly it is of me,' she thought 'to let myself care for a man who does not think twice of me! If he had cared one iota for me, would he not have said so then?'

But the next evening at dusk Captain Drake sauntered in with that swinging gait of his, as if he were still treading the deck of an outward bound vessel.

'Don't run away, Flora,' said he, as the girl caught up her work, and prepared for a precipitate retreat.

'Did—did you want to speak to me?' she faltered, with downcast eyes.

'Don't I always want to speak to you? Sit down, Flora,' said he, 'and hear what I've been planning.'

'Now it is coming,' thought Flora, with a sick feeling at her heart. 'He is going to be married, and he is coming to tell me so.'

'I have decided to give up the seafaring business,' said Captain Drake.

'Have you?' fluttered Flora faintly. 'I am so glad.'

'And I've bought a farm in Berkshire,' he went on—'The old Berkshire farm, Flora, where you were born and brought up. I'm going to be a farmer.'

She looked at him, the rose and lily chasing each other across her cheeks.

'Oh!' she cried involuntarily, 'if I could see the dear old place once more.'

'But I won't go there to live,' said the captain determinedly, 'unless you'll go there with me, Flora, as the farmer's wife. What do you think of it, little girl? Shall it be a partnership?'

And when Mrs. Arkwright came in, the papers were all sealed, signed, and delivered—the 'partnership' was a foregone conclusion.

'I don't know how I shall succeed as a farmer,' said Captain Drake to his sister, 'but if little Flora here is only with me, there's nothing in all the world that I haven't courage to undertake.'

And when Mrs. Arkwright took Flora's hand in hers, the girl whispered—

'I think I am the happiest creature in all the wide world. Because, dear Mrs. Arkwright, he loves me.'—Wedding Bells.

A young medical student at Bowdoin College once asked Professor Cleveland of that institution if there were not some more recent works on anatomy than those in the college library. "Young man," said the Professor, measuring the entire mental caliber of the youthful scholar at one glance, "there have been very few new bones added to the human body during the last ten years."

WRECKED IN PORT.

As you go from Boston to Hartford by way of the Boston & Albany Railroad, if you take the morning express there are two parlor cars thereunto attached, with all the appurtenances thereunto appertaining, including a porter with a wisp-broom in one hand and a place for a quarter in the other. Now these two parlor cars are twins, differing only, as is the case with twins, in their manners. The last time I went out that way, which was only a few weeks since, one of these cars was Governor Hawley, and the other was "Tother Gov'nor,' I don't remember who.

All went well until we reached Springfield. There the usual halt of five or ten minutes was made, the parlor car for Albany was switched off to its proper train and we went thundering on to Hartford.

Before we were well out of the depot an old gentleman confronted me. Round faced, well dressed, quick spoken, a little crusty and a general air of authority about him.

'Young man,' he said, sharply, 'out of that.'

'Out of which?' I said in innocent surprise.

'Out of that chair,' snapped the old party. 'Come, be lively, I want to sit down.'

I was puzzled and annoyed and stammered something about this being a parlor car and—

'Yes, yes,' he said impatiently, 'I know all about that; this is a parlor car and you've got my seat. Get up and get out of it now without any more words. Get a seat of your own somewhere and don't go around appropriating other peoples' chairs when they've gone for lunch. Get out, young fellow.'

I am naturally a very meek man, but I did make one more desperate effort to retain my seat. I said I had occupied that seat——

'Ever since I got out of it at Springfield,' snarled the old man. 'I rode in that seat all the way from Boston and the minute I left it you jumped into it. And now you jump out of it and no more words about it, or I'll make the car full of trouble for you.'

It began to dawn upon me then just how matters stood. In fact I knew, but I was nettled. Everybody in the car was laughing at me, and I do hate to be laughed at. I determined to wait for my sure revenge. I said: 'You'll be sorry if you take this chair.' He snorted fiercely, and I abdicated without another word in favor of the testy old jumper of claims who thus summarily evicted me. I arose, gathered up my hat, overcoat, lap-tablet, newspaper, book, big valise, little valise and articles, and thus burdened walked meekly to the rear of the car and sat down on the meanest, poorest, most uncomfortable seat in the train, the upholstered bench under the big mirror. The wood box in the smoking car is an easy chair in comparison with that bench. By and by the old chair grabber called out:

'Young man, where is that little red handbag I left here?'

I meekly said 'I hadn't never teched it,' and he roared out that it was there when I took his chair. But just then the conductor came along and glanced at his ticket while the old party explained how I had made way with his little red hand bag. 'That young man back there,' he explained, 'was in my chair when I returned, and my overshoes and a little red leather hand bag is——'

The conductor, a brisk, taciturn man, full of his own business, here handed back the old party's ticket.

'Wrong train,' he said brusquely. 'Get off at next station. This train for Hartford and New York.'

The old gentleman's face was a study.

'For Ha—Ha what—what?' he shouted. 'I know better! Told me at Boston this car went through to Albany.'

'Lem' see parlor car ticket,' said the conductor briefly. 'Yes, that's all right, you're on wrong car. Your baggage half t' Albany by this time. Get off at Hartford.'

'Well, when can I get a train back to Springfield?' wailed the jumper of chairs.

'T'-night,' said the conductor, and passed on to the next car.

Then I arose. I gathered up in my weak and long-suffering arms my hat, overcoat, lap-tablet, newspaper, book, big valise, little valise and articles, and walked back to that chair and stood before the most crest-fallen man the immortal gods ever pitied. I didn't say anything; I just stood up before him, holding my goods, personal effects and railway chattels in my arms and looked at him. He arose and vamosed the claim. And as I settled down in my recovered possession I made only one remark. I said to the poor old gentleman:

'I told you you'd be sorry if you took this chair.'

And he marched back and took a seat on the upholstered bench, to the merry laughter of the happy passengers. And the last time I looked around, oh, crowning woe! the conductor was making him pay a quarter for his seat in the parlor car.—Burdette, in Burlington Hawkeye.

Kentucky furnishes a queer story about a youth who had been courting for some time at Fernleaf. One evening the materfamilias noticed that he made frequent visits from the parlor to his satchel in the hall, and concluded to ascertain the cause of it. She was much relieved to find that it was only a quiet bottle of bromide of potassa solution that he was using to quiet his nerves. He doubtless popped the question that evening.

Dr. Mosely testifies that "those who drink nothing but water, or make it their principal drink, are but little affected by the climate, and can undergo the greatest fatigue without inconvenience, and are never subject to dangerous or troublesome diseases."

'How are you getting along?' asked a widow of her late husband, who appeared to her as a ghost. Ghost: 'Very well, indeed—much better than during my twenty years' married life on earth.' Widow (delighted): 'Then you are in heaven?' Ghost: 'Oh, no.'

Mr. Arthur is the sixth President who went wifeless into the White House. His predecessors in this respect were Jefferson, Jackson, Van Buren, Tyler and Buchanan, all but the bachelor Buchanan having been widowers.

The Reason Why.

Tho' she hath not Dian's grace,
Nor Aphrodite's perfect face
And golden hair,
She is dearer unto me
Than another e'er could be,
And more fair.

"Is she rich, then?" Oh! dear, no,
But I have enough, I trow,
For us two.
"What do I love her for?" Ah! well,
That I can't exactly tell,
But I do.

All my hope of gladness lies
In the love-light of her eyes;
The fond kiss
Of her tender, rosy lips,
Touch of her slender finger-tips,
Gives more bliss

Than you, cold cynic, e'er could guess.
But, still, the reason, you confess,
"You can't divine."
Well, I love her, and she loves me;
What better reason can there be
For joy like mine?

ROCKY MOUNTAIN SHEEP WALKS.

The Rocky Mountain Sheep Walks, says a writer in the Brooklyn Eagle, contain an area exceeding 1,000,000,000 acres, and sheep husbandry in sections of this great area has increased more rapidly during the past 10 years than in any other era or portion of the country. It produces about the same amount of wool that was clipped from all the flocks of the country in 1860. California alone produces as much as the census reported in 1850 for the United States entire. Since 1867 the increase of wool in the Rocky mountain areas has been fourfold. The cost per head of keeping sheep is estimated at 30 cents, because relatively there are few acres that do not supply some form of vegetation for herbivorous animals. Countless numbers of buffalo and antelope find a home there, and on the higher elevations live the sheep and the goat. While Mt. Washington, at an elevation of 5000 feet, is barren rock, with scarcely a vestige of vegetable life, the scores of peaks of the Sierra Madre, up to 10,000 and 12,000 feet, abound with grassy slopes and shady nooks, dense with a luxuriant growth of grass. At 7000 feet the climate and herbage combine to furnish the advantages of the dairy region of northern New York. At so high a latitude as the plains of Laramie the pasture is a wonder of freshness and abundance. It is the finest grazing region in Wyoming. The rainfall is greater there than in any other part of the territory. Notwithstanding the elevation of these plains, the winters are comparatively mild and open, and the stock is wintered without shelter and with very little feeding. Large herds of sheep and cattle have passed the winter with no other feed than the uncut grass of the valleys and plains. A stretch of herbage 500 miles in extent occasions no surprise among old herders. In the North Platte valley flow streams draining and watering a pastoral region that has been estimated at 40,000,000 acres. Ten years of exploration, by three expeditions, and an expenditure of $2,000,000, have surveyed and mapped but a small portion of this territory. In the Rocky Mountain region there have been established farms comprising an aggregate of 24,252,122 acres, and there still remains for settlement 906,045,317 acres.

A TOURIST'S BLUNDER.

The author of the sketches entitled "From Norway to Naples," in the Boston Commercial Bulletin, tells the following amusing story:

A story, most characteristic of Swedish good-nature, is told at the expense of a certain American tourist who attempted to "do" the sights of Stockholm with a courier, shortly before my arrival. Conversing, soon after his arrival in the public hall, with the "portier" of the hotel, our American bewailed his ignorance of the city and its language, and asked if there were not some guides to be procured. A quiet individual, who had been seated close by, called the porter aside and offered his services. The American at once, without question, told the quiet individual to be on hand at an early hour with an open carriage. At the time appointed carriage and guide were forthcoming, and the latter, to the American's surprise, attempted to enter the vehicle, but was rather sharply requested to occupy the box. All attempts at explanation were brusquely overruled.

So the smiling Swede stepped up beside the driver and in excellent English explained everything that could be seen in an afternoon's drive. Charmed at the acquisition of such a treasure, the American, at the conclusion of the drive, ordered his quiet valet de place to call again on the ensuing day, but was somewhat abashed when the latter regretted his inability to comply with the American's request, and, pulling out a card, smilingly wished the American and his companions a pleasant trip through Sweden. Judge of the latter's consternation on learning that they had been driving with a professor of the University of Upsala, who, in the kindness of his heart, hearing of the helpless condition of these strangers in a strange land, had given them not only the use of his private carriage but hours of his precious time.

"What," said a weeping wife as she opened the door for her muddled husband at midnight, "What causes you to come home at this hour?"

"Shpent all my money—hic—my dear, shpent all my money; no fun—er—shtayin'—er—any longer."

'Where is the island of Java situated?' asked a school-teacher of a small, rather forlorn looking boy. 'I dunno, sir.' Don't you know where coffee comes from?' 'Yes, sir,—we borrows it.'

'Well, my little man, aren't you barefoot rather early this season?' said a benevolent gentleman to a New Haven youngster. 'Guess not. Wuz born barefut, I wuz,' was the truthful reply.

'Old age is coming upon me rapidly,' said an urchin who was stealing apples from an old man's garden, as he saw the owner coming furiously towards him with a stick in his hand.

DEATH OF A MODERN HERCULES.

Bill Hood, a colored giant, who formerly lived in Madison, Ind., died at his home in Jackson county, aged 70 years. Hood was a remarkable man in many respects, and for strength was without an equal 30 years ago.

He was a teamster, and often while engaged in hauling rock, would lift with perfect ease and place on his wagon, flagstones that would require the strength of three or four ordinary men. When his team would stall in chuck-holes he would place his back under the axle of the wagon and boost the load out of the hole. When in his cups he was somewhat quarrelsome, and conscious of his great strength, would defy the officers of the law and their posses. Upon more than one occasion the officers had to shoot and disable him before they could arrest him. Upon one occasion a crowd of railroaders caught him in a liquor store, and by doubling teams on him, thought they could whip him. They accordingly locked the door to prevent his escape, and then informed him of their intention, when he immediately commenced to defend himself by taking the ringleader by the nape of the neck and the seat of the pantaloons, and raising him above his head, threw him clear through the show-window and out on the pavement. He then began to knock the others down with his fists, and floored them right and left, until he had the whole crowd down, when he quietly unlocked the door and made his way home, but not without a good many bruises, as his antagonists had been busy all the time belaboring him with ax-handles and such like weapons. His superhuman strength was such, however, that he soon overcame these, which would have killed an ordinary man.

WHAT AN OLD MAN NOTICED.

I have noticed that all men are honest when watched.

I have noticed that purses will hold pennies as well as pounds.

I have noticed that in order to be a reasonable creature, it is necessary at times to be downright mad.

I have noticed that some men are so honest that necessity compels them to be dishonest in the end.

I have noticed that silks, broadcloths and jewels are often bought with other people's money.

I have noticed that whatever is, is right, with a few exceptions—the left eye, the left leg, and the left side of a plum pudding.

I have noticed that the prayer of a selfish man is, 'Forgive us our debts,' while he makes everybody that owes him pay to the utmost farthing.

I have noticed that he who thinks every man a rogue is very certain to see one when he shaves himself, and he ought, in mercy to his neighbor, to surrender the rascal to justice.

I have noticed that money is the fool's wisdom, the knave's reputation, the poor man's desire, the covetous man's ambition and the idol of all.

I have noticed that all men speak well of all men's virtues when they are dead, and that the tombstones are marked with the epitaphs of the good and virtuous. Is there any particular cemetery where the bad are buried?

This is told of the tact displayed by President Eliot of Harvard College: At one time his students developed an unpleasant liking for sitting in large numbers upon the fence that surrounds the college yard. The President, not desiring such a thing to become a custom, was at a loss how best to break up the practice. At last, one evening as he was walking along the sidewalk, and the students were sitting on the fence singing, etc., the President said: 'Gentlemen, allow me to congratulate you on having adopted the Yale custom.' He was never troubled afterward by students sitting on the fence.

For the benefit of our exchanges, says the Hawkeye, we may state that the patent on the old lie about the farmer's daughter who shucked fifty-one bushels of corn between breakfast and dinner time, expired on the 23d of February, and has not been renewed. Any enterprising editor has now the legal right to locate the lie in his own part of the county, and increase the amount to 132 bushels in two hours. It will be just about as near the truth as the old patent, and will be a pleasant change for the wearied readers.

On the death of Chief Justice Marshall, nearly fifty years ago, the lawyers of Philadelphia moved for a monument. The project failed at the time, as is often the case, and only $3,000 was contributed. The last surviving trustee of the fund died a few days ago, and among his papers was found a careful account of the money, showing that by investment it had grown to $20,000. The monument will now be erected.

If you find a piece of tripe with a monogram in one corner you may know it's the towel.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1882.

THE English government has discovered no traces of the murderers of Lord Cavendish as yet.

WILLIAM P. STRICKLAND of Northampton, clerk of courts for a long time, has been appointed justice of the new Hampshire county district court by Gov. Long.

MAYOR LADD of Springfield vetoed the ordinance for introducing the electric light on the streets of that city, from economical motives, but the aldermen and common council have passed the measure over the veto, and the electric light company and its friends are happy.

THE Senate committee on woman suffrage at Washington has voted to recommend a constitutional amendment declaring that the right to vote shall not be denied on account of sex. The proposition will not pass the Senate, and the State Legislatures would not adopt it if it did, but the friends of woman suffrage think it is an advance in the right direction to even have the committee report such a measure.

WHAT to do with Blaine of Maine, is a conundrum which seems to be agitating the bosoms of the politicians in various quarters. There is talk of returning him to the House, and also to the Senate, while his Presidential chances are still being kept as warm as possible. Perhaps it would be as well to let him enjoy the sweets of private life for the remainder of his earthly pilgrimage, for he certainly can never get any higher than he has been.

THAT elegant new capitol at Albany, which has already cost many millions more than was estimated, will require a further expenditure of several millions before it is completed; and by that time it looks as though nobody would dare stay inside of it. Its construction has been so faulty that there are cracks and bulges in walls, ceilings and arches, notably so in the section occupied by the Assembly chamber, and the fear of its tumbling down has become so great that a committee has been appointed to see if the cause of the weakness can be discovered and remedied.

GEN. ROBERT SMALLS, the negro pilot who delivered a Confederate transport to the Union fleet off Charlestown, S. C., in 1862, and did good service in the war, afterwards representing South Carolina in Congress, was a guest of the Shaw Guard Veteran Association at Boston last week. A room had been engaged for him at the Revere House, but when the proprietors saw that his face was black they turned him off, saying they had no room, although they promptly accommodated a white man sent there later. It sounds rather queerly to hear of such a proceeding in the Old Bay State, and the hotel proprietors will hardly gain in reputation by their course.

COL. WORTHINGTON was confirmed as collector at Boston on Monday, although Senators Dawes and Hoar strongly opposed him, on the ground that the appointment was inconsistent with civil service reform, of which Col. Worthington is a well-known opponent. The Boston Civil Service Reform Association has adopted resolutions censuring the President for the appointment, which certainly is not in harmony with the prevailing sentiment of the party in this State, as expressed in its platforms. It is quite natural, however, that President Arthur should confer the office upon one of his friends, and the new collector will very likely show his appreciation of Senator Hoar's opposition by trying to defeat his re-election next year. It remains to be seen whether he can make the custom house as much of a force in State politics as it has sometimes been in the past.

GOV. LONG sent to the Senate on Tuesday his first veto of the session, returning the bill to regulate the practice of dentistry. He objected to special legislation for the dentists any more than other professional men or craftsmen, and to giving to the Dental Society alone authority to examine candidates, while at the same time they might refuse to examine as many as they chose. Both branches have passed the bill providing for the sale of the Commonwealth's stock in the New York and New England Railroad, at 50 per cent of its par value, for 6 per cent 20-year second mortgage bonds of the corporation. The House passed a bill transferring divorce cases from the supreme to the probate courts, but it was killed in the Senate by a large vote. The House on Wednesday rejected the resolve appropriating $45,495 for Walter Shanly, when it came up to be enacted, after passing both houses. The committee on public charitable institutions has reported a bill providing that the girls at the Lancaster School shall be removed to that at Monson, and that the boys at the Westboro School shall be transferred to that at Lancaster, thus vacating the Westboro premises for the uses of a reformatory for male prisoners, for which the committee on prisons has reported a bill.

A sharp frost Tuesday morning, and a flurry of hail and snow Thursday afternoon, made things and folks look rather blue. Early potatoes and other garden "sass" were sharply nipped, and a good many gardeners will have the pleasure of re-planting a portion of their ground. There is one ray of hope, however—we always have had some warm weather before Thanksgiving.

If you observe a dark and forsaken look about the front part of many residences, you need not necessarily conclude that the family are away. They have only been cleaning house and moving out the stoves, and you will find them now huddled around the kitchen fire, coddling their colds and trying to keep warm. Houses must be cleaned, you know, even if it is freezing weather.

The agent of the State Board of Charities was in town on Monday, looking up the small-pox cases, and cordially approved of the measures adopted by the town officials to prevent its spread. The two new cases in the Clark family at Thorndike were expected, and are the only new ones since those reported last week. No cases were developed among the boarding house people who were quarantined in the east part of the town, and they have been released. It is believed that with continued care there is now little danger of a further spread of the disease.

There is to be a series of reunions at Gettysburg this season, of both the "boys in blue" and the "boys in gray" who were in the great battle at that place in July, 1863. These reunions will be by localities, in order that Col. Bachelder, who has been commissioned by Congress to compile an account of the battle, may visit the different parts of the field with the veterans who were in the battle, and fully establish all the important historic points in regard to it. The first meeting will be of veterans who fought on July 2 at or near "Peach Orchard," "Wheatfield," "Devil's Den" and "Round Top." Col. H. R. Stoughton's regiment, the 2d U. S. Sharpshooters, was in front of "Round Top" and on the extreme left on that day, and the Colonel will attend the reunion at Gettysburg on the 7th of June.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The Baldwin will case has been on trial at Springfield this week. It was expected to go to the jury yesterday afternoon.

C. E. Edson's house at Glendale, occupied by his son, was destroyed by fire last week Friday night, during the absence of the family. It is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary, as the fire started in an unoccupied L. The loss is $1200; insured for $800 in the Home company of New York.

THORNDIKE.

The public schools will commence again Monday.

The inmates of the old Calkins house, on the eastern borders of the town, were discharged Monday, and have scattered in various directions.

The mother and brother of Charlie Clark, who has the small-pox, have been taken with the same disease. It was generally expected that it would go through the family. As the place is strictly quarantined, the disease will probably spread no further. No other cases are reported.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

There seems quite a stir in village improvements this spring.

The ladies' benevolent society met with Mrs. John Faulkner Wednesday afternoon and evening.

The Father Mathew parish opened its fair last Monday night. Rev. M. E. Barry of Northampton delivered that evening an address on "The Prose and Poetry of Ireland." There is a fair attendance each night, and the society will make a fair profit. Monday is the last of the fair.

The adjourned annual business meeting of the Evangelical society was held last Monday night. The soliciting committee reported $870 raised, there being wanted $15. The committee was discharged and C. L. Fuller was appointed a new committee. Chas. Walters was chosen janitor at a salary of $50 per year. The society concur in inviting Rev. F. M. Sprague to remain pastor another year.

WALES.

Mrs. Chas. Gokey has bought of F. E. Howe of Monson his house and land in this place.

The ladies of the Second Congregational church had a sociable at the town hall Thursday evening.

J. M. Lyon has the contract for the new school house in the Meadow district, and has the frame ready and will finish it soon.

The school committee have, according to law, appointed W. Eugene Needham and C. M. Gale as truant officers for the ensuing year.

O. C. Gilbert, formerly a slave in Maryland, gave a free lecture at the town hall Tuesday evening, and another one Wednesday evening, at which an admission fee was charged. He was well patronized, and all were satisfied.

Rev. A. N. Woodruff has been duly appointed as school committee, to fill a vacancy, for the remainder of the current year. The committee held a meeting and have elected Frank A. Royce chairman of the board for the year.

George H. Newton, from Monson, has had on exhibition here in Royce's Hall, for a few days, his tiger shark and various kinds of sea fish, but the most curious of all was the "What-is-It?" The power of description fails to give an idea of this singular species. It is a wonderful construction of a fish, resembling a human form in some respects.

WARREN.

L. C. Capen, from Baltimore, a former resident, is making us a short visit.

The Knowles pump works have just finished a 500-pound pump for Gen. Butler's steam yacht.

The Warren nine were beaten last Saturday by the West Warrens, 20 to 11. They have another game to-day.

Considerable change has been made in the grounds of the Congregational parsonage, by re-grading, and now the house itself is to be considerably improved.

The engagement of Miss Ida M., daughter of Wm. Lincoln, to Col. S. C. Warriner of Springfield, is announced, and is the cause of many congratulations from numerous friends.

The Geo. F. Blake Mfg. Co. have bought the Callahan, as well as the Comins place. The houses are to be sold and removed, and a new building put up. The price paid for the Comins place was $3500.

THREE RIVERS.

The ladies of the Union church had a "mum sociable" and festival in the church vestry Thursday evening.

The committee appointed by the town to remodel and repair the school house and to build an addition of two rooms, have contracted with L. Giffin, of this place, to do the work above the underpinning, for $2485.

Rev. F. B. Joy of South Yarmouth, who preached at the Baptist church last Sabbath, has remained in the village this week, and will occupy the same pulpit to-morrow. He is very generally liked, and it is thought probable that he will receive a call to the pastorate of the church.

The number of French Canadians in this place has become so large that they decided recently to have preaching services in their own language, and meetings are now held regularly at the town house, under the direction of Father Lamie. This makes the fourth Catholic society in town.

P. H. Rochford opened his new hotel to the public last Monday. The victualing and lodging departments were not quite ready, but the bar-room was in perfect working order, and if we may judge of its future by its auspicious opening it will be a success. It has been said that Mr. Rochford would keep a "respectable drinking place," and some of our citizens have been anxiously waiting to see the curiosity, and now that it has appeared, it proves to be just like the other kind. The "opening" Monday night was certainly a disgrace to the town. Intoxicating liquors were not only sold, but were given away to both men and boys, until they became so drunk that they did not know what they were about. Although this is but the beginning, it is time that such work should end.

Mr. Editor:—Thinking that it would be of interest to your readers to hear of the success of our new hotel enterprise in this village, I venture to give you some items, that they may judge for themselves of its prospects, and the acquisition to the business of the place by providing for its wants.

The hotel is a fine building for a village like this, standing on the lot between the store of D. F. Holden and one of the smallest lots in the village—being only four feet front—lying between the hotel and the lot on which stands the house of N. K. Rogers. The building not being finished or furnished, and our people being quite thirsty (there having been no liquor sold for the past week), word was passed around that beer and whisky would be free last Monday. Many of our citizens, as soon as the business of the day was over, betook themselves to the hotel, and soon began to wet their thirsty throats with ardent provided by mine host, and from that time until ten or eleven o'clock the sight was grand above description. Sometimes something would rouse the ire of the guests, and a fight would commence, and then a general rush would be made for the door, and old men and boys would be piled up in front of the door, one on top of another, in such a manner that it took some time to free those at the bottom. This was repeated several times during the evening, the company apparently enjoying the exercise hugely, although some were bruised and bleeding. The house will soon be finished, and then we expect a grand time eating turkey, as we cannot all have so good a time on whisky straight. *

Among the places of resort for pleasure recently brought into notice in the vicinity of Boston, the Point of Pines, Chelsea Beach, has its own peculiar attractions, its natural advantages being supplemented by the pleasant play ground produced by the expenditure of considerable sums of money. Illuminations and good music are provided during the season, and all sorts of schemes of entertainment have been formed to interest pleasure seekers, while fine opportunities for bathing fishing, boating, etc., will fill the bill for those who are fond of out-door sports. Situated only eight miles from the Hub, easy of access by land and water, its two hotels will probably be well patronized after the opening of the season, which is about June 1.

Simon Frazier fought in the war of 1812, drifted ashore on a single timber from his raft which the St. Lawrence Rapids had knocked to pieces, was blown fifteen feet into the air by the premature discharge of a blast, assisted in a boiler explosion on the Hudson, was brought home half dead from three other accidents of which the particulars have not been preserved, twice recovered from illness after his doctors had given him up, and finally died in peace, last week, in the Home for the Aged, near Troy, at the age of 105 years.

There was a gathering of Congregationalists at the Massasoit House in Springfield, Monday afternoon, which resulted in the formation of the Connecticut Valley Congregational Club, with Ex-Gov. William B. Washburn of Greenfield as president, and President Seelye of Amherst and Senator Haile of Springfield as vice presidents. The club is designed to foster the general interests of Congregationalism and bring the Congregationalists of Western Massachusetts into a more intimate acquaintance. Bi-monthly meetings will be held.

Albert L. Murdock was last year awarded $4000 damages in a suit against the Boston & Albany Railroad, for locking him up at Pittsfield, after buying tickets at Springfield for North Adams, one of which the conductor refused to take, as it had been punched. The supreme court at Boston has now sustained the exceptions of the defendant, and set aside the verdict.

The wife of Dr. C. D. Belden, representative from Williamstown, was probably fatally injured by James Noble, her insane brother, on Sunday. Noble left his bed, seized a club and smashed the windows, and then attacked his sister, who had rushed to protect her child from his fury, fracturing her skull, breaking her arm, and bruising her shockingly.

The District supreme court at Washington is understood to be unanimous in overruling the exceptions in the Guiteau case, and he must be executed on the 30th of June. Mr. Reed, the assassin's lawyer, says he will take other steps to save his client's neck, but there is no likelihood of his succeeding.

Frederick Chamberlain, a well-known Orange farmer, died last Sunday, and his wife on Monday, both from blood-poisoning. While using guano on his land last week, some of it got into a cut on his hand, and his wife imbibed the poison while dressing his sores.

An exchange stated the other day that "the dwelling house and contents of Sidney Thompson was burned to-day." It does not state whether the poor man survives the destruction of his contents. If he does, he must feel terribly empty without 'em.

A few days ago United States officers in New York threw into the sea eighteen thousand pounds of snuff which had been stored for thirty years and had become worthless. It was seized originally for non-payment of taxes.

There is a good prospect that Georgia's shadowy but lively Representative in Congress, Alexander H. Stephens, will run as independent candidate for Governor of his State, with a capital prospect of being elected.

The Atlantic cable companies have "pooled their issues," and after next Monday rates will be doubled, the present price of 25 cents a word being advanced to 50 cents.

The subscriptions for "Betty and the Baby," Sergeant Mason's wife and child, amount to $6867. The money has been received by Mrs. Mason.

A meeting of druggists has been held in Worcester this week, resulting in the organization of the State Pharmaceutical Association.

Magazines, Etc.

The June Atlantic is a Longfellow memorial number, and will be peculiarly acceptable to those who admire and love both the poems of Mr. Longfellow and the poet himself. A fine steel portrait of Longfellow forms the frontispiece of the number, which contains a hitherto unpublished poem by him on "Decoration Day." Dr. Holmes contributes three sonnets in commemoration of Longfellow, entitling them "Our Dead Singer;" and O. B. Frothingham writes an article in commemoration of the poet and his works. The fourth paper in the "Studies in the South" is devoted to a variety of subjects, in which both the Southern people and those in other sections of the country who wish to know all about the South cannot fail to be interested. John Fiske writes an essay in memory of Charles Darwin, and inasmuch as he was acquainted with Mr. Darwin, his paper possesses unusual interest and value. Edward Atkinson has a thoughtful paper on "The Rapid Progress of Communism," there are additional chapters of Thomas Hardy's "Two on a Tower," Miss Phelps's "Dr. Zay," and Mr. Bishop's "House of a Merchant Prince," and the usual choice variety of short and interesting stories and articles. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

In the North American Review for June, Senator Allison has a paper on "The Currency of the Future," in which he indicates the measures that will have to be taken by Congress for insuring a stable currency after the national debt has been extinguished. "A Memorandum at a Venture," by Walt Whitman, is an explanation of his purpose and point of view in trenching upon topics not usually regarded as amenable to literary treatment. "Andover and Creed Subscription," by Rev. Dr. Leonard Woolsey Bacon, is a philosophical Review of the present state of dogmatic belief in the churches. Hon. George F. Seward, late minister to China, in "Mongolian Immigration," makes an argument against the anti-Chinese legislation. Dr. John W. Dowling, Dean of the New York Homœopathic Medical College, comes to the defence of the Hahnemannic School of medicine, against a recent attack upon its principles and methods. O. B. Frothingham has a sympathetic article on Swedenborg. Not the least important paper is one entitled, "Has Land a Value?" by Isaac L. Rice, it being a criticism of one of the fundamental postulates of Henry George's political economy. Finally, Charles F. Lydecker essays to prove that a "National Militia" is a constitutional impossibility.

Chase & Sanborn, tea and coffee importers at 87 Broad street, Boston, have recently issued a neat little pamphlet, describing the properties, history and culture of the coffee plant, with a little treatise of the different varieties of the berry, its manipulation and adulteration, with other facts interesting to know, and on which they should be well qualified to speak.

Heavy rains in Illinois and other parts of the West during the last few days have greatly damaged the wheat crop and delayed farming operations. West of the Mississippi the prospects are more flattering. In Southern Kansas the crops are in splendid condition, and the wheat harvest is but a few weeks off. There is prospect of a big crop of corn. Advices from Minnesota and Dakota are also favorable.

Recently he put himself under a doctor's care, and was relieved of a striped snake twenty inches in length.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years
"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

IS THE
STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE

Facts, say the professors, are obtained by the concurrent opinion of the largest number of best able to judge. This principle applies to the Steinway pianos, as the largest number of people pronounce them to be the best, and the firm is doing the largest volume of business of any piano-making concern in the world. Purchasers, by paying $75, $100, $150, $200 or $300 more, according to the style, for them than for any other pianos; dealers, by comparing every other piano with them; makers, by putting their pianos below them in price, and then claiming that they are pretty nearly as good, because they "have some of Steinway's workmen," or "foreman from Steinway's," or "use Steinway's scales," etc., all proclaim that

THE STEINWAY
IS THE ACKNOWEDGED STANDARD PIANO,

Not only in this country, but also in Europe it stands as far ahead of all other pianos as it does in America.

This fact deing established that the Steinway is the best, of course the next best is that which is nearest like it, which purchasers can decide for themselves by listening and comparing with the standard.

"I SHALL S'EEP WIV HIM TO-NIGHT."

Sometimes I believe the little ones say the best things after all. I know a little family in Detroit who are heart broken and sad this Saturday night. There were three last Saturday, but to-day only two are left. The tie that bound them more closely than that which the clergyman drew has lately been loosened, and the light of their countenances went out with the red winter sun only the other night. The father is a railroad man, whose duties call him away from home nearly three-fourths of the time. It was his habit when he was about to start for home, to telegraph his wife, apprising her of the fact. In these telegrams he never failed to mention the name of the little four-year-old, and the dispatches usually ran as follows: "Tell Arthur I shall sleep with him to-night." The baby boy was very proud of these telegrams, which his mother would read over to him, and he considered the 'teledraf' a great institution. The other night when the fever had done its work, and the mother was sobbing out her anguish, the little one turned calmly in his bed and said, "Don't ky, mamma; I s'all s'eep wiv Dod, 'oo know. Send Dod a teledraf and tell him I s'all s'eep wiv him to-night." But the message went straight up there without the clicking of wires or the rustle of wings. —Detroit Chaff.

Kosciusko Murphy, who is remarkable for his large, generous ears, has had a falling out with Miss Esmeralda Longcoffin, an Austin belle towards whom he had been suspected of entertaining matrimonial intentions. Somebody asked him the other day why he and Miss Longcoffin were not out buggy riding as much as usual, to which Kosciusko replied that he did not propose to pay buggy hire for any woman who called him a donkey. "I can't believe that Miss Longcoffin would call any gentleman a donkey," was the reply. "Well, she didn't come right out and say I was a donkey, but she might just as well have said so. She hinted that much." "What did she say?" "We were out riding, and it looked very like rain, and I said it was going to rain on us, as I felt a drop on my ear, and what do you suppose she said?" "I have no idea." "Well," she said, "that rain you felt on your ear may be two or three miles off."—Texas Siftings.

Last Sunday evening a Boston divine suddenly paused somewhat near the close of his sermon and said: 'We would all be glad if that young man in the vestibule would come inside and satisfy himself whether she is or is not here. That would be much better than keeping a half-inch draft on the occupants of the back pew.' And in the solemn silence that followed the congregation could hear a sound outside as of the retreat of an army with banners.—Christian at Work.

A new route to Europe is proposed, by the construction of a railroad to the most eastern point of the Newfoundland coast, from whence a line of swift steamers will run to the west coast of Ireland. It is estimated that a saving of 48 hours in time would thus be made, while the sea voyage would be reduced to 1700 miles, and the 1000 miles of dangerous coast between Cape Race and New York entirely avoided.

It's funny, but a soft-palmed woman can pass a hot pie plate to her nearest neighbor at the table with a smile as sweet as distilled honey, while a man with a hand as horny as a crocodile's back will drop it to the floor and howl around like a Sioux Indian at a scalp dance.

Terrible itching and scaly humors, ulcers, sores and scrofulous swellings cured by the Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) externally, and Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) internally. Ask about them at your druggists. m

CUTICURA,

THE NEW BLOOD PURIFIER RESOLVENT.

I will now state that I made a miraculous cure of one of the worst cases of skin disease known. The patient is a man forty years old; had suffered fifteen years. His eyes, scalp and nearly his whole body presented a frightful appearance. Had had the attention of twelve different physicians, who prescribed the best remedies known to the profession, such as iodide potassium, arsenic, corrosive sublimate, sarsaparilla, etc. Had paid $500 for medical treatment with but little relief. I prevailed upon him to use the CUTICURA RESOLVENT internally, and the CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally. He did so, and was completely cured. The skin on his head, face, and many other parts of his body, which presented a most loathsome appearance, is now as soft and smooth as an infant's, with no scar or trace of the disease left behind. He has now been cured twelve months.

Reported by
F. H. BROWN, ESQ., Barnwell, S. C.

SCROFULA SORE.

Rev. Dr. ——, in detailing his experience with the CUTICURA REMEDIES said that through Divine Providence one of his parishoners was cured of a scrofulous sore, which was slowly draining away his life, by the CUTICURA RESOLVENT internally, and CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally. The poison that had fed the disease was completely driven out.

ECZEMA.

Sixteen months since an eruption broke out on my leg and both feet, which turned out to be Eczema, and caused me great pain and annoyance. I tried various remedies with no good results, until I used the CUTICURA RESOLVENT internally and CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally, which entirely cured me so that my skin is as smooth and natural as ever.

LEN. M. FRAILEY, 64 South St., Baltimore.

CUTICURA.

The Cuticura treatment, for the cure of Skin, Scalp and Blood diseases, consists in the internal use of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, the new blood purifier, and the external use of CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP, the great skin cures. Price of CUTICURA, small boxes, 50c.; large boxes, $1.00. CUTICURA RESOLVENT, $1.00 per bottle. CUTICURA SOAP, 25c.; CUTICURA SHAVING SOAP, 15c.

SAD ACCIDENT.

MR. OSCAR CRAIG Blown up by a Premature Blast in the Rosendale Cement Quarry—DESTRUCTION of an EYE—Its Subsequent removal by Surgical Operation.

Mr. Oscar Craig was foreman in a cement quarry at Rosendale, Ulster Co., N. Y. By an explosion one day in the quarry he lost an eye—lost it totally. Under the impression that the matter was less serious the local physician told Mr. Craig that his eye was not lost wholly, but could be saved by treatment. The experiment was tried and failed. Worse remained behind, for he was in danger of losing the other also, through sympathetic inflammation. In this strait he consulted DR. DAVID KENNEDY, of Rondout, N. Y., who told him the injured eye must be taken out to save the other. To this Mr. Craig demurred, and went back home in doubt. His local physician said: "Go to New York." To New York the patient went, and one of the most eminent oculists in the country, having looked at the case, said: "You have lost one eye entirely; go back and do what you can to save the other." Briefly, Dr. Kennedy removed the ruined eye and treated Mr. Craig with "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" to build up the system, and the result was successful.

Dr. Kennedy's success as a surgeon is due to the use of "Favorite Remedy" in the after treatment.

Are you troubled with Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Constipation or Derangement of the Kidneys and Bladder? then use Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." It will not disappoint you. Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists. 4w8

TRAINING A HUSBAND.

So you want ter know how I came ter hev Caleb, when I knew jest heow he used Nancy, his first wife. Wal, I'll tell ye all about it.

You know Dan'l left me pretty poorly off. I hed two little children, an' what ter dew I didn't know. The mortgage was ter run eout in about a year an' a half arter he died. I'd sent the children down to brother John's ter go to school. Brother John wanted me to give them ter him, and he'd do well by 'em, an' I was meditating on it, orful loth to dew it. But what else could I dew with them when the old farm was took away from me?

One day, when the time was near eout, I was a hoein' the beans side of the fence jinin' Caleb's cornfield. I tell yer, Hanner, I never felt bluer in all my born days. I always lived and worked on a farm, an' couldn't do no other kind of work; so what was to become of me I didn't know.

'Purty good hoein' for a green hand,' sez somebody over the fence.

'Yes,' sez I, 'I've done enough of it since I was left alone. 'Practice makes perfect,' we used ter write in our copy-book when we were children,' an' I couldn't help heaving a sigh.

'Wal, Emmerline,' sez he, 'you'n I seem to be in the same fix. You need a man to do your hoeing and sich, an' I need a woman to see ter my house, an' if you're agreed we'll hitch horses and work in double harness. I can't find no hired help that'll do as Nancy did.' (Thinks I to myself, an' you'll never find another wife 'twill, either.) 'So what d'ye say, Emmerline?'

P'r'aps I didn't think o' nothing for the nex' few minutes. It all flashed over me in a secont, what an unfeeling man he'd allers ben. Poor Nancy had ter dew all the housework, an' a good deal 't belonged ter him ter dew, an' he was stingier than an old miser, tew.

I knew he was a smart man ter work, was forehanded and was able to live in a good deal better shape than he did, an' you know, Hanner, that poor Dan'el was just the oppersite. He was a norful clever man, was Dan'el, but kind o' shiftless an' easy, an' it always worrited me so much tew hev things goin' so slack. Sez I ter myself, a body can't hev everything; ther's allers some eouts, an' a poor man's better'n none. So I speaks right up, an' I sez:

'Caleb, we've been nabors for many a year. I know your failin's, an' s'pose you know mine; an' so, ef you say so, all right; p'r'aps we both might do wuss.'

Wal, ter make a long story short, we agreed ter hev the business dun right off. Caleb said that it was stylish to go on a weddin' tower now-a-days, and that as he wanted ter go down to Bangor to see about selling his wool, an' as Sarah Jane Curtis (who used ter work for him) lived about half way, an' we could stop there both ways and not cost us anything, he thought we'd better go. His niece, Rebecca Gilman, yer know, lives there, and we could make her a visit at the same time. Brother John lives there, tew, you know, an' I'd made up my mind that I'd jest bring home the child'en.

An' so I did; but Caleb he was orful sot agin it, but sed 'of course they can come and make a visit;' an' I let him think so, 'cause I wasn't quite ready to have words with him, yet.

We stayed about a week, an' got home along in the afternoon all right. Ther nex' morning I woke up purty airly, an' I sez to myself: 'Courage, Emmerline, now or never.' I kep' still, fer Caleb was still a-snoring, but bime by he fetched an on'airthly snort that wake't h'mself up, an' w'en he see as it was gettin daylight, he nudged me, and sez he:

'Wake up, Emmerline; Emmerline, it's broard daylight; come, come, git up, we shan't hev any breakfast ter-day.'

I was orful hard ter wake, but after a while I managed tew, an' while I was a-rubbin' my eyes I sez: 'Got a good hot fire, ain't ye, Caleb?'

'Fire?' said he. 'No, I never build any fires. Nancy allers built the fires.'

'Did she?' sez I, as cool as a cucumber. 'So did Dan'el.'

I turned over an went to sleep agin—or, at least, he thought I did.

Wal, he wiggled, and turned, and twisted, and he didn't move to get up for about an hour, an' when the sun rose an' shone inter the bedroom winder, he got up and built the fire. There wasn't no kindlin's nor a stick o' wood, an' he had to skirmish round lively an' get some in.

Arter the fire got tew crackling in good shape I got up. I didn't hurry none, let me tell you. I was most dead lying abed so long, but sez I to myself: 'Ef I make the fires now, I'll prob'ly hev to do it in cold weather, an' I won't do it for any man.'

He was pretty sullen all day, but I didn't take no notice of him, an' he got over it. The nex' day he was ter begin hayin' an' had six men ter help him. I had to do all the work, an' take care of the milk an' churnin', an it was no fool of a job. Come time ter get dinner, an' there wasn't a sliver o' wood cut. I sent Johnny (he was then about 7 years old) out in ther field ter tell Caleb I wanted him.

He came in looking savage enough, and wanted to know what it was I wanted. Sez I:

'I want some wood ter burn.'

'Wal,' sez he, 'there's a whole wood-pile out there. Help yerself.'

'An' not a stick split,' sez I. 'You will hev ter git a bigger stove than that.'

'Wal, it ain't such a hard job ter split it,' sez he. 'Nancy used tew, of'en, when I was bizzy.'

'Did she?' sez I. 'So did Dan'el.'

He got the wood, an' said, as he was going out, that he didn't want ter be called in out o' the mowing field again, unless 'twas for victuals.

'All right,' sez I.

'The nex' day 'twas the same thing. Not a stick split. Thinks I: 'Old fellow, you ain't got no Nancy here. I'll larn ye a little somethin' that p'r'aps yer don't know.' So when it was dinner time I blows the horn, an' in comes all seven of the men an' sets down ter the table. Sich 'stonished lookin' faces as they had as they viewed the grub! There was the biscuit just dough, the pertaters, an' meat, an' vegetables, and everything was washed clean and put on raw. Not a thing was cooked.

Caleb looked blacker'n a thunder cloud.

'What does this mean?' sez he.

'It means what it means,' sez I. 'You said yesterday that you didn't want ter be called in from the mowing field again, unless it was for victuals; here they are.'

'Nice shape, tew,' sez he.

'Wal, I can't cook 'thout wood,' sez I, drily like.

With that all seven of 'em started for the door, an' they never left the pile till it was ready for the stove. I never was bothered for wood again.

A few weeks after I wanted some money purty bad. I wanted ter send Johnnie and Nellie ter school, an' I was bound that they should have some clothes fit to wear. I asked Caleb a number of times to let me hev some, but he made all kinds of excuses. I didn't tell him what I wanted of it, mind ye. So one day along comes a peddler that bought butter'n eggs. I had considerable on han' that Caleb was intendin' to carry into ther city when he had time. So I sold every pound of butter an' every egg I had in the house. I got nigh on to twenty-five dollars for 'em.

'How much did ye git?' sez he.

I told him.

'Where's the money?' sez he.

'I've got it,' sez I.

'Wal,' sez he, 'Nancy allers give me all the money that she took for her butter and eggs.'

'Did she?' sez I. 'And so did Dan'el.'

He got tired of holding Nancy up before my eyes, for I would offset her with Dan'el every time. He found that I was powerful sot in my way, an' he thought he might as well let me hev my own way, an' so he sez: 'I don't mean to be ugly, but I won't be trod on by nobody.' When he wouldn't let me hev what money I wanted, I'd sell something every time. I sold two tons of hay one time, when I knew that he hed only enough to winter his critters. So, on the whole, he found eout that I wasn't afraid of him, and he behaved quite decent. I told him, not long ago, that he was growin' clever.

'Clever!' sez he; 'I'd rather you'd call me a dog-goned fule than clever.'

But I notice he has improved, an' I lay it ter his trainin'.

WEALTH IN THE SENATE.

The present United States Senate contains at least a score of Senators not one of whom is worth less than $200,000. The richest man in the Senate, is, of course, Fair of Nevada, who probably possesses as much as all the other Senators together.

Next to him in lucre is David Davis, of Illinois, a widower, who is reputed to be the possessor of millions.

It is somewhat difficult to name the Senator whose fortune ranks third in size, but if Eugene Hale of Maine has received the mantle of his father-in-law, Zach Chandler, with its well-lined pockets, his fortune is nearly as large as that of David Davis. The wife of Senator Hale is the only daughter of the late Senator Zach Chandler.

Other very wealthy Senators are Miller of California, Mahone of Virginia and Sawyer of Wisconsin, known to be worth more than a million each. Sewell, of New Jersey, is a railroad man, and is very wealthy.

Senator John Sherman, of Ohio, it is said, is worth more than $2,000,000, his property consisting largely of real estate in Washington.

Among the Senators who write their fortunes with seven figures are Cameron of Pennsylvania, Davis of West Virginia, and Plum of Kansas. Senators Hill of Colorado, Brown of Georgia, Groome of Maryland, McPherson of New Jersey, and Pendleton of Ohio are worth more than $500,000.

Many other Senators are comfortably fixed, possessing little hoards of from $50,000 to $400,000.

Among those who have but little comparatively here below, that is, not more than $100,000 apiece, are Morrill of Vermont, Anthony of Rhode Island, Rollins of New Hampshire, Jones of Nevada, and Jones of Florida, Johnson of Virginia, Beck of Kentucky, Saunders of Nebraska, Allison of Iowa, and Harrison of Indiana.

THE LAWN IN SUMMER.

In the spring months, when there are frequent showers, and the grass is in rapid growth, the lawn mower may be used as often as once a week with decided benefit. But in our climate, with its extremes and uncertainties, such fixed rules, as "mow once a week," will lead to trouble, if followed. With the first drouth the grass on the lawn shows a diminished growth, and is often really at a standstill. At such times, nothing worse can be done to the grass than to cut it. All that there is above ground is needed to sustain the root, and incidentally to shade the surface. In the treatment of the lawn, as in all other gardening operations, some thought should be given to the present condition of the plants, and the object to be gained by any operation. The kind of grass varies the time and frequency of cutting. A fine, thick bottom-growth of June-grass, or Blue-grass, may be kept pretty closely shaven. But many front yards and lawns have a Timothy or Herd's-grass sod, and if this is allowed to grow 8 to 12 inches high and then cut, it will leave a woody stubble, and if dry weather prevails, it will be a long time before a new growth from the roots comes up, the plot in the meantime having the appearance of a burned-over surface, or a dry stubble at best.—Am. Agriculturist for June.

Stories are common enough of needles traveling about in people's bodies and making their appearance in very odd places. But the most remarkable case is related of a young woman in New York, who got a needle in her wrist a year ago, and the other day it was removed from the right arm of a young man who has been keeping her company.

A Kiss for Sister.

She was a very little girl,
And as I bent and kissed her,
"There, that is for yourself," I said,
"And this is for your sister."

Last night I called in friendly way;
Some gay girl friends were there,
And laugh and jest went gayly round,
To banish every care.

The little girl came romping in
And unto me said she—
"I dive vat tiss to sizzer Bell,
'Ou left for her wiz me!

"She tissed me lots o' times an' said,
When folkes touldn't see,
I might dive 'em to 'ou—dust wait
'Till 'ou's alone wiz me!"

I blushed, and so did sister Bell,
The gay girl friends, ah me!
I wished the horrid things
A thousand miles at sea!

JUSTICE EAST AND WEST.

'I hate to live in a new country,' said Jones, 'where there is no law.' 'Yer bet yer,' chimed in Thompson. 'Law is the only thing that keeps us out of everlasting chaos.' 'Yes indeed,' said a legal gentleman present. 'It is the bulwark of the poor man's liberty, the shield which the strong arm of justice throws over the weak, the solace and the balsam of the unfortunate and wronged, the—'

'Oh, stop, 'er,' remarked a man with one eye. 'I won't have it that way. Law is a boss invention for rascals of all grades. Give me a country where there is no law, and I can take care of myself every time. Now for instance when I lived in Ohio I got a dose of law that I will never forget. I was in partnership with a man named Butler, and one morning we found our cashier missing with $3000. He had dragged the safe and put out. Well, I started after him and caught him in Chicago, where he was splurging around on the money. I got him arrested and there was an examination. Well, all the facts were brought out and the defense moved that the case be dismissed, as the prosecution did not make out a case in the name of the firm, and that if there was a firm, the copartnership had not been shown by any evidence before the court. To my astonishment the court said the plea was O. K., and dismissed the case. Before I could realize what was up, the thief had walked off.

'Well, I followed him to St. Louis and there I tackled him again. I sent for my partner and we made a complete case, going for him in the name of the commonwealth, and Smith, Butler & Co. Well, the lawyer for the defense claimed that the money being taken from a private drawer in the safe was my money exclusively, and that my partner had nothing to do with it; that the case should be prosecuted by me and not by the firm. The old 'bloke' who sat on the bench wiped his spectacles, grunted around awhile and dismissed the case. Away goes the man again. Then I got another bitch on him and tried to convict him of theft, but the court held that he should be charged with embezzlement. Some years after I tackled him again, and they let him go. Statutes of limitation you see. Well, I concluded to give it up, and I did.

'But about four years afterward I was down in Colorado, and a man pointed to another and said: 'That fellow has just made a hundred thousand in a mining swindle.' I looked and it was my old cashier. I followed him to a hotel and nailed him in his room with the money. Now, I says: 'Bill, do you recognize your old boss?' and of course he did. Says I: 'Bill, I want that three thousand you stole from me, and all legal and traveling expenses.' 'Ah, you do? didn't the courts decide that—'

''Curse the courts,' says I, putting a six-shooter under his nose. 'This is the sort of legal document that I'm traveling under now. This is the complaint, warrant, judge, jury, verdict and sentence all combined, and the firm of Colt & Co., New Haven, are my attorneys in this case. When they speak they talk straight to the point of your mug, you bloody larceny thief. This jury of six, of which I am foreman, is liable to be discharged at any moment. No technicality or statutes of limitations here, and a stay of proceedings won't last over four seconds. I want $10,000 to square my bill or I'll blow your blasted brains out.' Well, he passed over the money right away, and said he hoped there'd be no hard feelings. Now, there's some Colorado law for you and it is the kind for me! Eh, boys?' and the crowd with one accord concurred in the cheapness and efficacy of the plan by which a man could carry his court on his hip, instead of appealing to the blind goddess in Chicago and St. Louis.—Salt Lake Tribune.

There are 600,000 habitual drunkards in the United States. If they lose half their time it would be a loss of $150,000,000 to the nation in productive power, and in wages and wealth to both the nation and themselves every year. Besides this, Dr Hargraves has estimated that the time lost by the 1,404,323 tipplers in the United States in one year would amount to $146,849,592, and he adds that investigation will show this large aggregate is far below the true loss.

A paragraph writer in the Boston Post reaffirms the statement that necessity is the mother of invention. 'Sometimes,' he says, 'we want the door between our office and the one next to it closed, and the editor in that room of course feels that we are getting high-toned and exclusive, and it wounds him. And we don't like to do that, so we have invented a way to make him shut the door himself. We sing.'

The substitution of a 'b' for a 'p' in the Boston Advertiser's otherwise beautiful account of some Emerson memorial services made a line of a poem appear: 'We brayed and sang together.'

ONLY HIS WIFE.

A STORY OF EVERY-DAY LIFE IN ONE CHAPTER.

How he loved her! if any man in the world had said a word to hurt her feelings he would have knocked him down then and there; if any woman had ever assailed her with a breath of gossip she would have been compelled to go on her knees and ask forgiveness. If any one, man or woman, had hinted that she was slowly dying of a broken heart, he would have—well, what could he have done?

You see she was only his wife: the laws of society made him show a smiling face to all the rest of the world, but when things went wrong and trade was dull, and the country seemed going to the dogs he went home and told Nellie about it, and it relieved him so much to get rid of these daily perplexities: who can a man confide his troubles to if not to his wife? And then, when every word had gone down into her heart and sunk there like lead, he took his hat and kissed her good-bye—that was so sweet of him; he never forgot to kiss her—and went out and had a good time with the boys, for a man must have some recreation—and Nellie had the baby; what more can a mother ask? Most mothers know how much company a five months old baby is, especially when it is asleep!

But after awhile Nellie didn't have the baby. There was a season of little grief and desolation for her, and—well he felt bad enough too, for he loved his baby just as he loved Nellie, and perhaps he felt sorry that he had so often taken his hat and gone out, but other babies died and he tried to bear it like a man. For a while he staid at home evenings, but it seemed as if it was duller than ever with baby gone, and he hated to see a woman cry, and so fell into the old ways, and whenever he met a girl friend of Nellie's ante marriage days, he would urge her to drop in often for 'poor Nellie needed cheering up.'

It was all so strange to his wife, this change in him. Before they were married he wished for more days in the week so he could come and see her as often as he wished, and he never spent an evening away from her side. Did he love her less? She prized his society more, and as she sat alone in the long evenings and thought it all over, she wondered if business was her only rival, and why it should have claims upon time that should be solely hers, and as the night grew late and the hours still, she would start at every sound, and listen for the step that tarried, and cry silently from sheer loneliness and nervous watching. Or she would start up stairs to a little bureau and open one of its tiny drawers and look with hungry eyes on the soft merino shoes—her first and last—on the embroidered dresses, and kiss the dainty sleeves that bore creases of the dimpled arms, and baptize them anew in her tears, and when Charlie came home he would say, Crying again, Nellie? Seems to me you're always crying. It isn't very pleasant for a man to come home every night and find his wife in tears,' etc., etc.

And yet he loved her better than any one else in the world!

It came suddenly, the breaking down, and yet she had been ailing for a long time and was planning to go home as soon as Charlie could go home with her. He wanted her to go alone and let him come for her, but she said no, resolutely, and waited till he could accompany her. She had not been home since she was married and did not want to go like a widow. Besides, she was weak and nervous and unable to take the journey alone. She grew feebler every day, but Charlie pooh pooh'ed when his friends hinted she was ill. He called in a doctor who could not minister to a mind diseased, but gave her a tonic, and said her system was in a low state and told Charlie his wife would be all right in a few days, but as a change of air was good he might as well take her home.

And then it was all so sudden that he could scarcely realize it, but he sat in a darkened room, holding Nellie's hand and hearing her say over and over in her delirium, 'I'm going home—home,' and starting as the clock struck and asking where Charlie was, and why he staid so late, and mourning for her baby: and she told it all,—all the loneliness, all the heartbreak, the neglect, and she wrung his heart with pleadings for him to stay at home with her, 'Just this one evening'—and then there was peace, and Nellie had gone home.

They buried her by her baby, and that handsome widower with the deep band of crape on his hat and the sorrowful expression of countenance is Charlie; he truly mourns for his Nellie, for he truly loved her, and has given up going out with the boys, and spends his evenings in the solitude of his own chamber. When he is purified by grief he will marry again, most likely; and his second wife will not sit alone, listening for his tardy footsteps, and on the walls of memory he will forever see inscribed that lesson of life,

"For of all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these, 'it might have been.'"

NIHILISM is making itself felt so strongly in Russia that the frightened Czar has postponed his coronation for a year, fearing a successful attempt on his life. The Czar is really a pitiable object. Living in constant terror of sudden death, he has not the genius to institute any measures to strengthen his hold upon the people or weaken the power of his enemies, and the unhappy country is steadily drifting toward a revolution, which is liable to break out at any moment and overwhelm him.

The Legislature expected to finish up its business for the session last night.

POSTMASTER GENERAL HOWE finds that the postal revenue for the next fiscal year will exceed the expenses by about $1,500,000, and recommends that newspapers and magazines be carried free. This would of course prove very welcome to the publishers, but where there is one publisher to be benefitted by such a change, there are thousands of people who would receive greater benefit by the reduction of letter postage to two cents. This should be done first—then the other, whenever the government can afford it. The postmaster general's recommendation that the carrying of fourth class matter (parcels of merchandise) be abandoned will not prove a popular one, and will hardly be adopted.

THE people have not yet got at the facts in the reported drunken reveling of sundry Congressmen on their journey to President Garfield's funeral, when another scandal is reported to have been unearthed, under a bill appropriating $23,000 to make up a deficiency in the expenses of the Yorktown celebration. It is charged that the Congressional committee, under direction of Senator Johnson, chartered a steamer, on which some 400 or 500 people, members of Congress and their friends, lived royally at the expense of the government during the celebration, with a plenty of liquor and drunkenness. The facts ought to be brought out fully and clearly, that the people may know who the Congressmen are that rob the treasury after this fashion and indulge in drunken orgies every chance they get.

PENNSYLVANIA shows decisive signs of breaking away from the Cameron rule. At the recent regular Republican convention Don Cameron had everything his own way as usual, and the Republicans with independent proclivities, who have for years been attempting reform within the party, were given their customary back seats. On Wednesday the Independent Republicans held a convention at Philadelphia and nominated a State ticket. The convention was composed of earnest, intelligent and influential men, who believe in political equality, and they will make a determined fight upon principles which must commend themselves to every intelligent Republican not thoroughly imbued with the principles of "bossism." Their action means defeat for the Republican party in Pennsylvania, unless some compromise is made, which is not probable, and defeat seems to be the only possible method of bringing Cameron to a recognition of the rights of Republican voters.

It seems to be clearly proven that one or more of our dealers has done this very thing. Will our authorities take any cognizance of the fact?

Mr. Hamilton no longer pulls the reins over that fine 1300-pound horse which for the past two years and more has worked in the express delivery wagon in this village. The animal has been sold to J. M. Converse, and its place is taken by a young horse which has yet to develop the good traits and flesh of its predecessor.

S. W. French has invested this week in a new piece of horseflesh, a handsome young sorrel mare, which, it is intimated, is capable of doing some pretty fine traveling on the road. There are now quite a goodly number of fast horses owned in the place, enough to give promise of numerous interesting scrub races during the summer.

Frederick Hanks, who stole goods from White, Hellyar & Co's store some time ago, was fined $75 and costs before the superior court at Springfield this week. Andrew J. Fisher of Monson was given six months in the house of correction for larceny of a pocket book, and Hugh McManus was given a similar sentence for desecrating the Hampden cemetery.

One of our hotel runners "got left" badly the other day. A lady alighted from one of the trains and was asked by the runner where she was going. She answered, "To Collins Depot," and taking it for granted that she wanted a carriage he procured one, and hastened to the depot, only to find that his expected passenger was out of sight up the railroad, "footing" it to her destination. He has "set 'em up" for the boys several times since.

The stockholders of the Palmer National Bank at their special meeting on Monday voted to double the capital stock of the bank, making it $150,000. It was also voted that the stockholders be allowed to subscribe for the new stock at 120. The bank has for a long time been obliged to borrow largely, in order to supply the wants of its customers, but with this increase of $90,000 in its working capital, it is expected that it will be able to meet all the requirements of its customers for some time to come. Some 50 rights to the new stock were sold immediately after the meeting at a premium of 10 per cent. Fifty per cent of the subscriptions for stock will be payable July 1, and the balance Sept. 1.

The official programme for the Decoration Day observances in town, next Tuesday, will be found in full in another column, and as this is the first memorial service to occur since the organization of the Merrick Post, the members will make a special effort to have the exercises of the day pass off pleasantly and successfully. In consequence of the backwardness of the season and the consequent scarcity of flowers, the members of the Post will be grateful if the citizens of the town will take especial care to make as liberal floral contributions as possible, leaving them on Monday afternoon at the store of E. L. Davis in this place, at C. H. Murdock's house in Three Rivers, or with D. W. Taft at Thorndike.

John Bradley, a young man from Gilbertville, was before the district court on the 1st inst. for drunkenness, and having no money to pay his fine was sent to Springfield. On the 10th he was released, and went to work in the factory at North Monson for a few days. Last Monday he was to meet his mother here and go home with her, but he fell in with some companions whom he had to "treat," and before the afternoon was over both he and his mother were lying on the floor of one of our blacksmith shops, dead drunk, and they were afterwards loaded into a wagon, about as a couple of dead hogs would be loaded, and carried to the lock-up—a sad spectacle, and a bright illustration of the manner in which our saloons observe the conditions of their licenses, by selling to minors and to persons already under the influence of liquor. The husband and father came down the next morning and paid their fines, and the trio then returned to their home.

There was another narrow escape from a serious fire in our village Thursday night. C. H. Keith had remained in his market in the basement of Lawrence Block somewhat later than usual that evening, and at about 9.30 o'clock went through to the back room to see that everything was all right for the night, when in the cracks of the sheathing overhead he discovered flames working their way along under the flooring. Dr. O. P. Allen, whose drug store is over the market, was summoned from his house, and with a small force-pump the fire was speedily extinguished before any damage was done. The fire had started under a partition between the back rooms of Allen's and Holden's stores. On one side of this partition stood Mr. Holden's kerosene barrels, while on the other side were Dr. Allen's barrels of wines, spirits, etc. Had the fire once burnt through the partition and got hold of these, the block must have gone. The cause of the fire is unknown, but was probably due to rats.

May has been making a determined effort to maintain to the end of her sway the cool and lachrymose mood she has been indulging in for some time. An occasional sunny day has no sooner raised hopes of a warmer "spell," than the clouds and rain have returned with fresh vigor, and the result is that the ground is pretty thoroughly soaked. The long wet period has given the grass a splendid start, however, and a fine hay crop seems assured. Farmers and gardeners who hastened to put in their early potatoes, corn, beans, etc., have seen some of them nipped by the frost, while corn and beans have in many cases rotted in the ground. But in spite of the seemingly backward condition of the season, Nature is slowly but surely donning her spring-time garb, and a few warm days, of which yesterday's bright sun seemed a forerunner, will give things a wondrous start, and summer will burst upon us full-fledged almost before we are aware of it, while the crops will grow rapidly enough to more than make up for the delay caused by the cold and wet weather we have been having.

The annual meeting of the Union Association of Universalists is to be held in the Universalist church in this place on Wednesday and Thursday, June 7 and 8. This association includes the churches at Charlton, Chicopee, Cooleyville, Fitchburg, Gardner, Hardwick, Milford, Orange, North Orange, Oxford, Palmer, Southbridge, Spencer, Springfield, Warren, Webster, Westminster and Worcester, and an effort is to be made to make the meeting one of more than usual interest. The association will meet at 10.30 a. m., and after organizing there will be addresses on Public Worship—"Its Necessity," by Rev. G. F. Jenks; "Its Benefit to the Individual," Rev. R. S. Kellerman; "Its Benefit to the Community," Rev. W. M. Barker. In the afternoon these phases of Sunday school work will be discussed: "What shall we Teach?" Rev. B. V. Stevenson; "How shall we Teach?" Rev. E. J. Chaffee; "How can we secure the Attendance of the Children upon the Preaching Service?" Revs. R. T. Sawyer and E. A. Perry. In the evening there will be a sermon by Rev. M. H. Harris. On Thursday, at 8.30 a. m., there will be a conference meeting conducted by Rev. E. W. Pierce. At 10 o'clock Missionary Work will be considered—"Is it needed?" Rev. C. L. Waite; "How should the Universalist Church do its Missionary Work?" Rev. F. Magwire; "Methods of Raising Money," Rev. I. P. Quimby. In the afternoon Revs. J. K. Mason, F. A. Bisbee and J. F. Simmons will discuss the question, "What Kind of Preaching does the World Need?"

Another town meeting has been called, when an effort will be made to rescind for the second time the vote appropriating $5000 for a new school house on Otis street. There are also articles to see about employing a night watchman and re-locating Liberty street, and to rescind the vote giving Cutler Moore $100 more damages than awarded him by the selectmen.

The dedication of the Methodist church took place Wednesday. The house is a neat, tasteful structure, with all the modern improvements. The sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Chapman of New York. Former pastors were present and assisted in the exercises, which added much to the interest of the occasion. The church has a debt upon it of between five and six thousand dollars, but as the sum of two thousand dollars was pledged during the afternoon and evening by those present, it is hoped that it will soon be free.

MONSON.

E. P. Newton has sold his dwelling house to A. A. Gage.

R. S. Munn has the foundation started for a large addition to Gage's store.

A. D. Cady, of Eastford, Conn., takes possession of the Monson House June 1st.

Horace Moulton has the cellar stoned up for a dwelling house on Hampden Avenue.

Builder Graves has the dwelling house raised on Hampden Court for W. A. Deichmann.

R. M. Reynolds has his wool warehouse, 200 feet long, all up, and it makes quite a business-like structure.

Everybody is visiting Deichmann for fine plants and flowers, and he hopes another year to have as fine a greenhouse as any locality of the size of Monson will warrant.

G. H. Newton was in Stafford Springs last week with his monster shark and curiosities from the ocean, and has been exhibiting in Westfield this week to crowded houses.

Uncle John Ferry is supplying our people with the best vegetables the season affords, and has planted an unusually large acreage for the wants of his many patrons, who know they "get the best" when buying of him.

There have been four fast horses brought into town lately, by R. M. Reynolds, Geo. W. Burdick, Rufus Flynt and George Flynt, and if there was a good piece of road in town over four rods in length, perhaps we might see some trials of speed.

T. Jedowin has a fine rig for light express work, and also a "public carriage" for the accommodation of the ladies and others who can best appreciate the convenience, and it is not improbable that the movement will deter others from starting a horse railroad.

Joshua Tracy, an esteemed citizen, died last Saturday, aged 73. Mr. Tracy came to Monson from Norwich about 30 years ago. He has been postmaster, selectman and for nineteen years one of the assessors, also justice of the peace, and a director in the Monson National Bank.

Decoration Day at Monson will be observed by a detatchment of soldiers visiting Moulton Hill Cemetery at 1.30 p. m. At 3 o'clock a meeting will be held in Central Hall, where prayer will be offered by local clergymen, appropriate songs rendered by a male quartette, and an address delivered by Rev. Frederick Woods of Springfield, who was stationed at Monson during the war, and by his eloquence materially assisted the town in filling their several quotas. After the services in the hall the soldiers will visit the graves in the cemetery in the village. All soldiers and sailors are especially invited to join the ranks in the hall and on parade, and citizens are earnestly solicited to furnish flowers, which may be left with the committee at the hall during the day.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Jason E. Stone, formerly of this town, takes the position of night watchman at the State Primary School at Monson, the first of June.

The Mass. Central have within a week paid their help all back pay except the last seven weeks, and the laborers expect the rest after the June meeting as the stockholders.

George B. Cutler has received a unanimous call from the Congregational church and parish at Hebron, Conn., which he will accept. He hopes to be ordained within a few weeks.

The firemen of the various hose companies in town have formed a base ball association, and are ready for challenges. Wm. Gilmore is president and manager, D. Reilley is captain of the nine, and Charles Wilcox secretary and treasurer.

Crusade Lodge, I. O. G. T., will hold on June 21st a strawberry festival and rustic sociable, the funds to be used for the good of the order. They have emptied their treasury in caring for their sick members, and now use this way to replenish it.

The Otis Company are this season to put a new tower on their No. 3, or what is called the new brick mill. It is to contain both stairways and an elevator. It will be placed on the east end of the mill, between it and the picker building, which is to be raised to the same height as the mill.

The St. Jean Baptiste Societe will appear in their new uniforms for the first time on Decoration Day. It will no doubt be the largest organization in the procession. The regalia is very neat, being trimmed with heavy gold lace, and the beaver and maple leaves, which are emblems of their order. The hats, furnished by F. N. Hosmer, are cardinal, with gold band and the golden letters on the front, "S. J. B." The uniforms have cost $420.

The Clippers have had a challenge from the Westfield firemen for a series of games, but have not as yet signified their determination to accept. To-day they will don their new uniforms and play the Amateurs, if the weather is favorable. The first game between the picked nines of the Ware high school and the same from Belchertown took place last week Friday, and resulted in a victory for the Belchertown boys, by a score of 8 to 6. The second game was played on the new grounds of the Clippers yesterday.

The first steamer, as far as we know, that was ever built and owned in town, will be launched on the river next Monday to be in readiness for Decoration Day. F. E. Marsh and C. F. Edmonds, having formed a partnership under the name of Marsh & Edmonds, have built the boat with the idea of running it through the season for the accommodation of parties either day or evening. She is named after the Indian name of the river, the "Nenameseck," is 20 feet long by 6 feet wide, and is calculated to carry 12 to 15 persons. The engine is one horse power, with a two horse power boiler.

The walking match drew a crowd at Music Hall Thursday evening. Thirty-nine times around the hall counted for a mile. All the contestants advertised from out of town failed to appear, so it was carried through by local talent alone. In the ten hour race Sullivan made 7 miles and 16 laps and withdrew. Pratt won the race, making 46 miles 6 laps, Buckley 44 miles 26 laps, Burns 42 miles 16 laps. The prizes were $25, $10 and $5. Pratt was entered by the Otis Hose Company, the others were their own backers. In the ten mile race E. Hapeney won the first prize of $10, and J. McGrath the second, $5; time not given.

The new State constabulary made their appearance in town Thursday morning and made a raid on several saloons where it was suspected that liquors were sold without a license. Among those arrested were Owen McMahon, M. M. Hennebry, Owen McArdle, Michael J. McArdle, J. B. Weisman; so it would seem that the liquor sellers are not to rest easy upon a bed of roses, under the new order of things, as many had supposed. The most severe criticisms we have heard is on the action of one who has received from the town several hundred dollars in consequence of an accident, while it is alleged he was under the influence of liquor, and who ran his horses from the depot to inform the saloon keepers of the appearance of the officers.

Memorial Day, next Tuesday, will be celebrated by J. W. Lawton Post, G. A. R., in a somewhat similar manner to that of past years. They will meet at G. A. R. Hall at 7 1-2 o clock in the morning, and take teams at 8 o'clock for the cemetery in Ware Center. At ten o'clock a procession consisting of the Post, Oregon Engine Co., Land League, St. Jean Baptiste Societe, A. O. H. and other local organizations, will march through the principal streets to the different cemeteries, and will decorate the graves of all deceased soldiers in Ware. The Ware Cornet Band will be in attendance through the day. At 1.30 p. m. the Post, with invited guests, will form on Main Street and proceed to Music Hall, where the address will be delivered by Major Henry Winn of Greenfield. Contributions of flowers are solicited, and it seems at present that it would be necessary for all interested to make a special effort to furnish them, as the Spring has been so backward that but few outdoor plants are in blossom.

A bold attempt was made by a gang of tramps early Wednesday morning to wreck the owl train on the Shore Line Railroad, between East River and Madison, Ct. Station Agent Way, on his way home about 1 o'clock caught five men wedging ties between the rails on a bridge, and was shot in the arm by one of them. He ran to the station and succeeded in stopping the train, which was nearly due at the time. The wreckers got away safely. There is an embankment 30 feet high each side of the bridge.

There have been sold from the nursery of the Agricultural College at Amherst this spring 12,000 peach trees, 2000 apple, 500 pears and 2000 of other fruits and ornamental shrubs. The careful raising of all these is necessary as a part of the instruction which the college gives, and by raising them in such quantities they become a source of profit and give the students who pack and handle them a practical knowledge of the nursery business.

The track of the European steamers has recently been obstructed by unusually large ice fields, and many vessels have been locked in the ice. North of Cape Ray a large ship was seen which had been forced up an ice cliff to a hight of more than 40 feet above the sea level. The steamer Peruvian was caught in the ice for several days, but arrived safely at Quebec Tuesday night.

A Brooklyn man has some disease which puzzles all the doctors who have seen him, though they all agree that he cannot live long, and he now offers to pay $500 to anybody who will tell him what his disease is and keep him alive for six months or a year, or $1000 to anybody who will name his disease and cure him.

THE STEINWAY PIANO

IS THE

STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE

Facts, say the professors, are obtained by the concurrent opinion of the largest number of best able to judge. This principle applies to the Steinway pianos, as the largest number of people pronounce them to be the best, and the firm is doing the largest volume of business of any piano-making concern in the world. Purchasers, by paying $75, $100, $150, $200 or $300 more, according to the style, for them than for any other pianos; dealers, by comparing every other piano with them; makers, by putting their pianos below them in price, and then claiming that they are pretty nearly as good, because they "have some of Steinway's workmen," or "foreman from Steinway's," or "use Steinway's scales," etc., all proclaim that

THE STEINWAY

IS THE ACKNOWEDGED STANDARD PIANO,

Not only in this country, but also in Europe it stands as far ahead of all other pianos as it does in America.

This fact deing established that the Steinway is the best, of course the next best is that which is nearest like it, which purchasers can decide for themselves by listening and comparing with the standard.

What the Burdock was Good For.

"Good for nothing," the farmer said,
As he made a sweep at the burdock's head;
But then, he thought it was best, no doubt,
To come some day and root it out.
So he lowered his scythe and went his way,
To see his corn, to gather his hay;
And the weed grew safe and strong and tall,
Close by the side of the garden wall.

"Good for a home," cried the little toad,
As he hopped out of the dusty road.
He had been having a dreadful fright,
The boy who gave it was yet in sight.
Here it was cool and dark and green,
The safest kind of a leafy screen.
The toad was happy; "For," said he,
"The burdock was plainly meant for me."

"Good for a prop," the spider thought,
And to and fro with care he wrought,
Till he fastened it well to an evergreen,
And spun his cables fine between.
'Twas a beautiful bridge—a triumph of skill;
The flies came round it as idlers will;
The spider lurked in his corner dim,
The more that came, the better for him.

"Good for play," said a child, perplext
To know what frolic was coming next.
So she gathered the burrs that all despised,
And her city playmate was quite surprised
To see what a beautiful basket or chair
Could be made, with a little time and care.
They ranged their treasures about with pride,
And played all day by the burdock's side.

Nothing is lost in this world of ours;
Honey comes from the idle flowers;
The weed which we pass in utter scorn,
May save a life by another morn.
Wonders await us at every turn.
We must be silent and gladly learn.
No room for recklessness or abuse,
Since even a burdock has its use.

CAUSE AND CURE OF CONSUMPTION.

Prof. Tyndall writes to the London Times to direct attention to some important results which may flow from the investigations and experiments of a German scientist, Dr. Koch. The result of these researches is to prove that tubercular consumption is caused by a parasite, which is described as rod-shaped and which disclosed itself in every case on the microscopic examination of the diseased organs of men and animals. Transferring directly, by inoculation, the tuberculous matter from diseased animals to healthy ones, Dr Koch in every case reproduced the disease. To prove that the real contagion came from these bacilli he cultivated them artificially for long periods of time and through many successive generations. In every case inoculation was followed by the reproduction and spread of the parasite and the generation of the original disease. It is not easy to exaggerate the importance of these discoveries. About one-seventh of the human race, it is estimated on the basis of reliable statistics, die from some form of tubercular disease, and fully one-third of those who die in active middle life die from this cause. It had been already demonstrated that the disease was communicable, but Dr. Koch's aim has been to determine the precise character of the contagion which previous experiments had proved to be capable of indefinite transfer and reproduction. The result of his experiments tends to show that there is an essential similarity between tubercular diseases and the common eruptive fevers previously shown to be due to the growth within the body of the minute parasites termed bacilli. It is a characteristic of many, and probably of all, the disease-producing bacilli that they can be so altered by cultivation as to produce a mild disease instead of a severe one, and that the designed communication of the former will afford protection against the latter—as in the case of small-pox and the splenic fever of cattle. The next step will be the attempt to cultivate the bacilli in diminished intensity. What has already been accomplished, in the opinion of the London Times, affords a reasonable hope that an antidote to consumption and to tuberculous diseases generally may soon be brought within our reach; and the London Medical News expresses a like anticipation thus:

"If Pasteur's culture experiments have led to the discovery of a method by which the poison of splenic fever is rendered harmless and the disease prevented by the timely inoculation of the modified virus, may we not hope that the time is not distant when the ravages of consumption will be prevented by the inoculation of a modified bacillus? The medical profession of the whole civilized world will now await with the keenest interest the developments which may be expected from further study of the bacillus tuberculosis."

HIGHLY ASTONISHING.—A certain lady in this county set a hen upon thirteen eggs. A few days afterward, looking into the nest, she was surprised to find the hen missing, and the eggs gone, and in their stead a huge rattlesnake comfortably coiled up. Noticing the swelled condition of his snakeship she procured a spade and pinned his head to the ground. Then, with a rake, the tail was drawn out and fastened down to prevent wiggling. A penknife soon split the reptile from head to tail, and the eggs were taken out. Being carefully washed they were placed under the same hen and eventually every one hatched out, and the chickens grew and thrived. We regret that a strict regard for truth compels us to say that the hen was not swallowed nor were the chickens marked with a snake.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Cattle King Powers has two ranches in Colorado, situated one on each side of the Arkansas river. One extends eighteen miles along the river and is all under fence. The other stretches for twenty-two miles along the river and far back enough to include an expanse of 80,000 acres, all under fence. There are forty miles of water front and 100,000 acres of pasture under fence, all owned by one man. The fencing on these ranches will sum up over 100 miles.

Terrible itching and scaly humors, ulcers, sores and scrofulous swellings cured by the Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) externally, and Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) internally. Ask about them at your druggists. m

CUTICURA,

THE NEW BLOOD PURIFIER RESOLVENT.

I will now state that I made a miraculous cure of one of the worst cases of skin disease known. The patient is a man forty years old; had suffered fifteen years. His eyes, scalp and nearly his whole body presented a frightful appearance. Had had the attention of twelve different physicians, who prescribed the best remedies known to the profession, such as iodide potassium, arsenic, corrosive sublimate, sarsaparilla, etc. Had paid $500 for medical treatment with but little relief. I prevailed upon him to use the CUTICURA RESOLVENT internally, and the CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally. He did so, and was completely cured. The skin on his head, face, and many other parts of his body, which presented a most loathsome appearance, is now as soft and smooth as an infant's, with no scar or trace of the disease left behind. He has now been cured twelve months.

Reported by
F. H. BROWN, ESQ., Barnwell, S. C.

SCROFULA SORE.

Rev. Dr. ——, in detailing his experience with the CUTICURA REMEDIES said that through Divine Providence one of his parishoners was cured of a scrofulous sore, which was slowly draining away his life, by the CUTICURA RESOLVENT internally, and CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally. The poison that had fed the disease was completely driven out.

ECZEMA.

Sixteen months since an eruption broke out on my leg and both feet, which turned out to be Eczema, and caused me great pain and annoyance. I tried various remedies with no good results, until I used the CUTICURA RESOLVENT internally and CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally, which entirely cured me so that my skin is as smooth and natural as ever.
LEN. M. FRAILEY, 64 South St., Baltimore.

CUTICURA.

The Cuticura treatment, for the cure of Skin, Scalp and Blood diseases, consists in the internal use of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, the new blood purifier, and the external use of CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP, the great skin cures. It soft ens and cleanses the scalp, giving it a healthy action, It removes and cures dandruff and humors. By its use falling hair is checked, and a new growth will be produced in all cases where the follices are not destroyed or the glands decayed. Its effects are beautifully shown on brashy, weak or sickly hair, on which a few applications will produce the gloss and freshness of youth. Harmless and sure in its results, it is incomparable as a dressing, and is especially valued for the soft lustre and richness of tone it imparts.

SAD ACCIDENT.

MR. OSCAR CRAIG Blown up by a Premature Blast in the Rosendale Cement Quarry—DESTRUCTION of an EYE—Its Subsequent removal by Surgical Operation.

Mr. Oscar Craig was foreman in a cement quarry at Rosendale, Ulster Co., N. Y. By an explosion one day in the quarry he lost an eye—lost it totally. Under the impression that the matter was less serious the local physician told Mr. Craig that his eye was not lost wholly, but could be saved by treatment. The experiment was tried and failed. Worse remained behind, for he was in danger of losing the other also, through sympathetic inflammation. In this strait he consulted DR. DAVID KENNEDY, of Rondout, N. Y., who told him the injured eye must be taken out to save the other. To this Mr. Craig demurred, and went back home in doubt. His local physician said: "Go to New York." To New York the patient went, and one of the most eminent oculists in the country, having looked at the case, said: "You have lost one eye entirely; go back and do what you can to save the other." Briefly, Dr. Kennedy removed the ruined eye and treated Mr. Craig with "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" to build up the system, and the result was successful.

Dr. Kennedy's success as a surgeon is due to the use of "Favorite Remedy" in the after treatment.

Are you troubled with Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Constipation or Derangement of the Kidneys and Bladder? then use Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." It will not disappoint you. Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists. 4w8

"Bring Flowers."

Read at St. Paul's Church, Palmer, Sunday evening, May 28th, the G. A. R. Post being present.

"Bring flowers to deck the soldiers' graves,"
Aye, crown each lowly bed,
Let God's free gift tell where they lie,
Our nation's honored dead.
No costly offerings we bring,
No monument we rear,
Each lovely blossom whispers low
"A soldier sleepeth here.'

Radiant with hope, our youthful band
Went forth at country's call,
"Union our watchword, God our trust,
Whether we stand or fall;"
Thus spake "our boys," each loving heart
Held mother, child or wife;
They gave—all that they had to give,
Home, health, strength, yes, and life.

"Bring flowers," let soldier hands bedeck
The graves where soldiers lie.
Brave comrades! loyal heart to heart,
Bound by no common tie;
The summer heat, the winter's cold,
The camp, the march, the fight,
The toils and dangers of the day,
The perils of the night.

They shared them all, they're resting now,
Life's toilsome march is o'er,
The echo of no bugle-note
Sounds on the "other shore."
The ranks are thinning; year by year
We miss some well-known face;
Some soldier falls—ah! no recruit
Can fill the veteran's place.

"Bring flowers" then, the brightest, best
Of Flora's treasure give,
Thus tell how, in our inmost hearts
Our nation's heroes live;
And while o'er all our peaceful land
Our soldiers' graves are seen,
Mindful of those who won that peace
We'll keep their memories green.

A STRATAGEM.

'There is no use in talking about it, Jessie,' Mr. Van Zandt said shortly, when his temper had subsided a little. 'I am surprised that a daughter of mine should have so little judgment. You are too young to marry anyhow, and when it comes to marrying a rattle-brained hotspur like Maurice Carew, the idea is too absurd to be entertained for a moment!'

Jessie bit her lip to keep back the quick retort that trembled on the tip of her tongue. She had inherited some of her father's temper, and it was hard to be silent when she heard a word of reproach uttered against the handsome young engineer to whom she had engaged herself, in spite of Mr. Van Zandt's violent opposition.

The hot tears sprang to her eyes, but she forced them back, knowing full well that any exhibition of such weakness would only add fuel to her father's wrath. Mr. Van Zandt prided himself on the 'common sense and sound judgment' of his daughters, and he abhorred anything pertaining to a scene. Jessie knew this, and, fearing to damage her cause by a passionate outbreak, she rose abruptly and left the room.

It was a glorious day in mid-September. Beyond the grove that skirted the smooth-shaven lawn at Moresk, she knew that some one was anxiously awaiting her, vainly trying meanwhile to con a table of logarithms.

The idea of calling Maurice 'a rattle-brained hotspur!' The loyal little heart swelled rebelliously at the thought, and as she hurried out of the house to take her report of this long-dreaded interview with her father, there was a resolute look about her mouth which boded no good for her father's authority.

'Jessie—darling!' a tall, lithe limbed young fellow cried, as she emerged from the grove to their place of rendezvous. 'It is as we feared! I can see it in your face.'

'Oh, Maurice!' she said tremulously, hiding her face on his breast, and giving way to a torrent of tears. 'How can any one be so cruel!'

Young Carew's face paled quickly. His clear gray eyes gave a sudden flash and he drew himself up to his full height. Yes, certainly he was a hotspur; but hardly rattle-brained.

'My darling,' he said, with proud tenderness, 'I had not dared to hope for anything better. But see! you are quite unnerved. I should not have allowed you to undertake so much alone. My dear little sweetheart, I should have spared you this.'

'Oh, no, no!' Jessie cried, drying her tear-wet face. 'That would never have done. You would have got just as angry as papa did; you would have quarrelled, and then our last hope of winning his consent would have vanished.'

'I feel like a knave,' Maurice said bitterly. 'These clandestine meetings are anything but honorable. But—I cannot give you up, Jessie! I am young and strong. I can work for you, darling. God knows I do not want to steal you like a common thief; but I would rather die than live without you! Will you trust your future to me, dear? Do I ask too much of your love?'

'No, Maurice,' she said gravely, looking steadfastly at the clear gray eyes bent upon her with a look that bordered on adoration. 'I love you, I will marry you, come what will. But do not let us despair yet. I cannot abandon all hope of winning papa's consent. Oh, Maurice, how can he bear to separate us? How can he forget so entirely how strong a thing love is? I cannot understand it! When he was young—before he married mamma—he had to contend with the opposition of her whole family. If his uncle had not died and left him so much money, I suppose he would never have been able to conciliate my grandfather. Yet he seems to have forgotten all that.'

'That is human nature, darling,' Maurice said, bitterly. 'The world is full of such inconsistencies. But, unfortunately, I have nothing in the world, Jessie, but a couple of thousand dollars in bank, and a fair salary.'

'I don't care what you have, or what you have not,' Jessie replied, impulsively. 'I should marry you if you were a beggar!'

To such a sentiment what could he reply? He gathered her close to his heart, and kissed her with a proud feeling of possession. Looking down on the sweet face upturned to 'his the bonnie blue eyes with their lashes still wet with tears, the tender, submissive lips so temptingly near, he forgot all about the 'stern realities,' and together they drifted into the land of lovers' dreams.

A week after the stormy interview with her father, which had ended so unsatisfactorily, Jessie was seated with her mother in the library, when Mr. Van Zandt came in. Jessie rose apprehensively as he entered, and approached the door. Her mother called her back with considerable emphasis.

'I wish you to be present, Jessie,' she said, 'while your father and I discuss an important matter.'

Then to Mr. Van Zandt she added, gravely:

'Sit down, Robert. I want to talk to you.'

'Eh?' Mr. Zandt queried in surprise. 'What's the matter now?'

'It is this unfortunate affair between Jessie and young Carew.'

'Well, what of it?' he said, shortly, frowning with displeasure.

'I'm sorry to say,' Mrs. Van Zandt observed, taking a crumpled piece of paper from her pocket, 'that matters have gone further than we expected. I found this letter in Jessie's pocket this morning. I will read it to you and you can judge for yourself of its significance. It begins:

'"My darling!"'

'Bah!' Mr. Van Zandt exclaimed, in disgust.

'"I have viewed the situation,' read Mrs. Van Zandt, 'in every possible light, and I do not see any other way out of our present difficulty than that which I proposed night before last. We must be married secretly!'

'The wretch!' Mr. Van Zandt shouted, excitedly, springing out of his chair and walking up and down the room. 'The impudent rascal! I'll settle him! Married secretly, indeed! For shame, Jessie! To persist in your infatuation for such an unprincipled adventurer! I am astonished at your lack of perception. The scoundrel! The—the—'

'"I cannot recognize the right of any parent,"' Mrs. Van Zandt continued, while her husband seated himself again, and beat an angry tattoo with his boot on the floor—'"to separate two lovers whom God himself has created for each other!"'

'A fine sentiment, that!' shouted Mr. Van Zandt. 'Why, the man who writes such heresy as that ought to be imprisoned as a dangerous character. He strikes a blow at one of the most sacred institutions of society. He is a vagabond, a breeder of terrible fallacies! And to think that such a man as that could have won the love and confidence of my daughter!'

'"I rely on your love for me,"' Mrs. Van Zandt resumed. '"The happiness of my life is in your hands. Meet me at the old place to-morrow night."'

'She shall not! She shall not!' cried Mr. Van Zandt, excitedly.

'"If Heaven favors our plans, my darling,"' concluded Mrs. Van Zandt, with a peculiar smile, '"I shall claim you as my bride before another week has passed. I could not endure this separation much longer. Have pity on the misery of your devoted lover,

ROBERT VAN ZANDT."'

"Eh? What did you say?' Mr. Van Zandt said, in a dazed way, sitting bolt upright in his chair and staring blankly at the letter which his wife had thrust into his hands, and which he now saw was written on a piece of faded yellow note paper, bearing the date of 'June 19, 1837.'

There was a step behind, and looking up, he saw that 'rattle-brained hotspur,' Maurice Carew, standing beside him, with a half-amused, half-concerned expression in his clear gray eyes.

'Eh? What the devil does this mean?' the old gentleman stammered.

'You have been calling yourself all those hard names,' Jessie said, gleefully, slipping to the other side of the chair.

'It is your own letter, Robert,' Mrs. Van Zandt said, tapping the paper he held in his hands significantly. 'You wrote it to me over forty years ago!"'

'Do not forget, papa,' Jessie's eldest sister said, going down on her knees before him, 'do not forget that you were young yourself once.'

'And were guilty of a like offense,' Maurice said, boldly. 'I love Jessie, Mr. Van Zandt, with the best love of which my nature is capable. I am young, strong and willing to work for her. I am not without prospects in business, and I am very sure we could live comfortably on my present salary.'

Poor Mr. Van Zandt looked from one to the other with an expression of comical confusion.

'Eh?' he repeated, moving uneasily from one side to the other. 'Eh? Oh! hang it! I've put my foot in it pretty deep!'

'Let the children have their way, Robert,' pleaded Mrs. Van Zandt, gently. 'Life is too short, and happiness too uncertain to be trifled with.'

'Please, papa!' Jessie said, coaxingly.

'Be generous, sir,' Maurice added, in a low tone.

'I'm in for it, now!' Mr. Van Zandt cried, nervously. 'What the—yes; yes! Do as you please! Marry to-morrow, if you like. I wash my hands of the whole responsibility.'

Then jumping up out of his chair, he beat a hasty retreat, leaving the precious letter lying on the floor.

'Oh!' cried Jessie, picking it up tenderly. 'You wonderful letter! You have executed a fine manœuvre. You deserve to be immortalized.'

'I shall never forget your timely aid,' Maurice said, gravely, but with a happy ring in his voice, as he ventured for the first time to kiss his prospective mother and sister-in-law. 'Jessie says that it was you who devised the scheme, Mrs. Van Zandt. You would have made a great general or a diplomat.'

'I only wanted to see you both happy,' the true little woman replied, with tears in her motherly eyes.

'You took the surest way to make us so,' Maurice said quickly, slipping his arm around Jessie's waist and looking down into her blue eyes, where the happy light of his own was reflected.

Then Mrs. Van Zandt and Jessie's sister stole out of the room, leaving them alone with their new-found happiness, as we shall do also.

The latest joke about King Kalakaua of the Sandwich Islands is that he cannot help being a good man. The reason assigned is that his ancestors ate so much missionary in their time that it worked into their system and was transmitted to their descendants. Missionaries who are eaten are, after all, not wasted, it would appear.

'Ah! my friend,' said a clergyman to a parishioner who was the husband of a termagant and who had made application for a divorce, 'we should be yielding and forgiving. There are no divorces in heaven.'

'That's the reason,' said the sufferer, 'why I am so anxious to get a divorce here.'

Attentive: 'I do so like to talk to you,' she says, softly, in a pause of the conversation, beaming on him and sighing. 'Why?' asks the unsuspecting youth. 'Because,' she answers gently, 'because you are all ears!'

He is the happiest man who can carry golden threads of boyish enjoyment farthest along through the web of life.—Beecher.

Growing Old.

At six—I well remember when—
I fancied all folks old at ten.

But, when I turned my first decade,
Fifteen appeared more truly staid.

But when the fifteenth year I'd run,
I thought none old till twenty-one.

Then, oddly, when I'd reached that age,
I held that thirty made folks sage.

But when my thirtieth year was told,
I said: "At two score men grow old!"

Yet two score came and found me thrifty,
And so I drew the line at fifty.

But when I reached that age, I swore
None could be old until three score!

And here I am at sixty now,
As young as when at six, I trow!

'Tis true, these rogues about my knee
Say "Grandpa!" when they speak to me;

But, bless your soul, I'm young as when
I thought all people old at ten!

Perhaps a little wiser grown—
Perhaps some old illusions flown;

But wond'ring still, while years have rolled,
When is it that a man grows old?

THE GREAT PYRAMID.

Richard A. Proctor, who has been expounding his views on the use of the great Pyramid of Cheops in Knowledge, claims that the structure was both a tomb and an astronomical observatory.

When we remember, he says, that the astronomy of the time of Cheops was essentially astrology, and astrology a most important part of religion, we begin to see how the erection of the mighty mass of masonry for astronomical purposes explained—or rather, we see how, being certainly astronomical, it must be explained. Inasmuch as it is an astronomical building, erected in a time when astronomy was astrology, it was erected for astrological purposes. It was in this sense a sort of temple, erected, indeed, for the peculiar benefit of one man or of a single dynasty; but as he was a king in a time when being a king meant a great deal, what benefited him he doubtless regarded as a benefit also to his people; in whatever sense the Great Pyramid had a religious significance with regard to him, it had also a national religious significance.

There is no other theory of the Great Pyramid which comes near to giving a commonsense interpretation of the combined astronomical and sepulchral character of this wonderful structure. If it is certain on the one hand that the building was built astronomically, and was meant for astronomical observation, it is equally certain that it was meant for a tomb, that it was closed in very soon after the king died for whom it was built, that, in fine, its astronomical value related to himself alone. As an astrological edifice, a gigantic horoscope for him and for him only, we can understand its purport, much though we may marvel at the vast expenditure of care, labor and treasure at which it was erected. Granted full faith in astrology (and we know there was such faith), it was worth while to build even such a structure as the Great Pyramid; just as, granted the ideas of Egyptians about burial, we can understand the erection of so mighty a mass, and all save its special astronomical character. Of no other theory than that which combines the two strange but most marked characteristics of the Egyptian mind can this be said.

SHE SAW HIM BETTER.

The general public has long conceded that the power of the hotel clerk is superior to that of the President. A new rival has sprung up in the railroad ticket agent, as was demonstrated in an Iowa station a few weeks ago.

"I want a ticket to B—" said a well-known known lady of the town, just before the train was due.

"Twenty-four cents," responded the agent, working his sausage-machine.

She laid down a silver quarter. Being well acquainted, and a practical joker, the agent drew from his pocket a glittering pants button and passed it over with the ticket, and scooped up the quarter.

"Is this a legal tender?" asked the lady, quietly.

"Oh, yes," he answered, with mock gravity; "they are the mainstay of the republic."

She pocketed it and got aboard, leaving the agent's face coruscating with smiles. A few days after he told it to a brigade of runners buying tickets for B——, and while he was enjoying the encore the lady appeared with:

"Ticket for B——, please."

"Twenty-four cents," with a sly wink at the runners. He laid down the ticket. She scooped it and laid down twenty-four dazzling pants buttons, exactly like the first.

"You said they were legal tender. They go a long ways in supporting a family," she chirped, sweetly, as she bowed from the presence of more than presidential prerogative.

THE SECRET OF GENIUS.

"They talk," said Tom Marshall, the brilliant orator and lawyer, to an intimate friend, "of my astonishing bursts of eloquence, and doubtless imagine it is my genius bubbling over. It is nothing of the sort. I'll tell you just how to do it: I select a subject and study it from the ground up. When I have mastered it fully I write a speech on it. Then I take a walk and come back and revise and correct. In a few days I subject it to another pruning and then re-copy it. Next I add the finishing touches, round it off with graceful periods and commit it to memory. Then I speak it in the field, on my father's lawns, and before my mirror until gesture and delivery are perfect. It sometimes takes me six weeks or two months to get up a speech. When I have one prepared I come to town. I generally select my own subject. I speak my piece. It astonishes the people, as I intend it shall, and they go away marveling at my power of oratory. They call it genius, but it is the hardest kind of work."

Irate sportsman—'Confound it, you've shot the dog! I thought you told me you could hold a gun.' Pat—'Sure and so I can, your honor. It's the shot, sorr, I couldn't howld.'

Longfellow was not without a sense of humor. He once slyly described a lady as wearing flowers on the "congregation side of her bonnet."

"I'll make a note of this," as the sharper said when he got a farmer to write his name on a piece of paper.

If beef goes much higher it will not be difficult for the cow to jump over the moon.

CATTLE IN THE HIGHWAY.

Mr. H. A. Haigh, LL. B., of Detroit, gives a resume of the laws on the above subject, in the American Agriculturist for June, from which we extract the following:

It is a general doctrine of law in this country that the land in the highway belongs to the owners of land lying along each side. With a few exceptions the American farm extends to the middle of the road, and the public has only the right to pass and repass there in an orderly manner, and the right to keep the way in repair. Every other use of the highway which does not interfere with this public right, belongs to the farmer owning the adjacent land. He owns the soil, grass, trees, stones, and gravel, and everything else upon the surface or under it, and may use them all in any way that does not affect the public right of passage; and the law will protect his ownership in them just as much as though they were inside his fence. No other person has any more right to pasture his stock there than in inclosed lands; nor can he hitch his horse to a tree there without being liable for the trespass, especially if the horse should gnaw the tree or do other damage; he can, in fact, only pass orderly along.

As to road fences, the laws do not, with the possible exception of those of New York above noted, impose any obligation; and the farmer may, if he chooses, remove such fences, without impairing his right of action against the owners of any domestic animals that enter and do damage by that means.

If a person lets his cattle go in the highway, he is liable for the trespass they commit by simply being there unlawfully; for the grass they consume, for the injury they occasion to the sod or by barking the trees, and for any other damage they may do. If while there they hook, kick, or bite any person lawfully using the way, he would be liable for the injury. A man once turned his horse into a public place where children were playing, one of whom began switching the horse, which turned and kicked and killed the child. He was convicted of manslaughter.

Notwithstanding the fact that the farmer owns the land of the road, he cannot use it himself for any purpose which at all interferes with the public right there. He cannot put his wood piles, wagons, or pig pens there; and if he does, and the traveler runs into them in the night and is injured, he would not only be liable for the private damages sustained—(Linsley vs. Bushnell, 15 Conn. 225) but he may be indicted for obstructing a public way.

MOCHA AND JAVA COFFEE.

If the official returns of the coffee trade are to be trusted—and presumably they are not greatly in error—the coffee-consuming public of this country has been for a long time past very much deluded. There are a multitude of people in this part of the world who are laboring under the belief that the beverage they drink at breakfast, and possibly after dinner, is Mocha coffee. Their grocer tells them that the article he sells is 'pure Mocha,' and they have no means of knowing that he is deceiving them, if indeed he has not been deceived himself. Some, with a peculiar fastidiousness, insist upon having a mixture, and want one-half or one-third Mocha and the remainder of Java coffee—a request which the grocer seemingly complies with; that is he takes the coffee from two separate compartments. Now, the last completed returns of the coffee production of the world are made up to the year 1878. In that year the estimated growth was 1,082,112,500 pounds, of which Brazil produced 407,127,300 pounds, or nearly one-half. Next came the Dutch East Indian possessions, where the crop amounted to 201,509,200 pounds; while Ceylon, South Africa and the West Indies furnished nearly all the rest. Arabia, it is true, appears on the list, but its total growth, the Mocha district and the rest of the country combined, was only about 4,500,000 pounds—that is not quite one-half of one per cent of the growth of the world.

When it is considered that coffee is extensively used in Arabia, that Mocha comes within the possessions of Turkey, a country peopled with coffee-drinkers, and that we have no direct communication with Arabia, one may well hesitate before he accepts the current Mocha fiction of the grocers. It is highly probable that not 10,000 pounds of this article are brought into this country in the course of a year, an amount that would not furnish a day's supply for the inhabitants of New York city. We all, of course, know the flavor of Mocha coffee, and hence cannot be deceived, though in reality probably not one in a thousand of us ever tasted it.—New York Times.

SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1882.

SOME of the Maine Greenbackers have had enough of the Fusion business, and propose to go it alone. They have nominated Solon Chase for Governor, and if there are enough of them to do anything, they will defeat Gov. Plaisted, who has been renominated by the Fusionists.

LIEUTENANT DANENHOWER and three other survivors of the Jeannette crew arrived in New York last Sunday morning, and there was a touching reunion with their friends. One of the poor fellows, Jack Cole, the boatswain of the Jeannette, is insane, from his long sufferings in the ice and snow.

FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS may be an inadequate salary for our legislators, but they should find it out before the last day of the session. They are all anxious enough to go to the Legislature on the expectation of even that sum. When we get up to biennial elections and sessions, the people will not grudge their representatives at the Hub a salary of even $800.

A GREAT STRIKE is in progress among the iron workers of Pennsylvania and the West. It is reported that 140,000 men quit work on Thursday between the Alleghanies and St. Louis. Only one mill is running at Pittsburg, and it looks as though the strike might spread through all the iron mills of the country. A gang of strikers beat a party of non-union men at Chicago Thursday evening, and a judge was dangerously shot in the promiscuous firing.

SPEAKER NOYES doubtless pleased the members of the House by his attitude of approval toward their salary-grabbing propositions, but he did not improve his standing with the people in general, and whatever his gubernatorial prospects may have been before, he injured them seriously by his course in this thing. Quite in contrast with his action is that of President Bishop of the Senate, who has made hosts of friends by his manly attitude on this question. Massachusetts makes governors out of just this sort of timber.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR has been in New York the past week, in consultation with his stalwart friends in regard to the nominee for Governor. It seems to be undetermined yet whether Gov. Cornell or Secretary Folger will be the candidate, but it is evident that the President proposes to maintain quite as lively and active an interest in the politics of New York as the proprieties of his position will possibly admit—if not more so. The President went fishing Sunday—a dignified and seemly performance, forsooth, for the chief magistrate of this country—with ex-Senator Conkling, and is closeted with him so much as to cause considerable comment, even in Ne York.

FATHER CUDDIHY, of Milford, is a bright example of priestly bigotry and intolerance. He addressed a letter to the Grand Army boys the other day asking them by what right they proposed to decorate soldiers' graves in the Catholic cemetery without the pastor's leave, and telling them he entirely disapproves of the plan of honoring the dead by "putting a penny's worth of cotton bunting on their graves." The money received from the town should be expended, he thinks, in having a solemn mass for the Catholic soldier, according to Catholic usage. The graves were decorated, however, according to programme, and the priest did not get any of the money he seemed to be itching for.

CZAR ALEXANDER seems to have been really frightened into doing something toward reform. It is given out that he will soon issue a manifesto announcing the postponement of his coronation for a year, in order to mature plans for reform in the administration of the government. Three commissions are to consider local and general institutions, and the giving to the people of a share in their administration, and Gen. Loris Melikoff is named as supreme head of all the commissions. Gen. Melikoff has been out of favor since the accession of the present Czar, but he is the man for the occasion, and the Czar has had to take him up again as his only hope. They have a big task before them, to devise measures which shall be alike satisfactory to the Czar and to the people.

OUR Legislature gained no glory in its closing hours. The House made a determined effort to push through a $650 salary grab, and sat through last Friday night in an increasingly ugly temper as the Senate rejected bill after bill sent up by the House, which was practically unanimous for the grab. Some of the members of the lower branch talked as though the senators were treading upon their rights and liberties, and a good many unparliamentary criticisms were made upon the action of the Senate. The latter body came uncomfortably near going over to the grabbers at one time, and would have done so but for the uncompromising firmness of President Bishop, who voted against the project, defeating it by a tie vote. Both bodies sat through the night until 7 a. m. Saturday, and after breakfasting the members of the House concluded to back down, and the Legislature was prorogued at 12.45, after a session of 143 days, during which 274 acts and 60 resolves were passed.

Some of the men at the Northampton jail being in the habit of pleading sickness when set to work, the jail physician has been trying successfully the experiment of feeding the ailing ones with water gruel. A game of base ball between the village boys and a nine from the State Primary School last Saturday on the park resulted in a victory for the latter, 16 to 10; but on Tuesday the village boys came out ahead in a return game at the school, by a score of 15 to 10. The weavers at the carpet mill had a game on the park Tuesday forenoon, the resulting score being 38 to 29.

We venture to say that few bands outside of the cities can play as well as our Palmer Cornet Band. Our people ought to hear it oftener than they do. Cannot arrangements be made for a series of out-door concerts during the summer? We presume the members of the band would gladly give our citizens an occasional treat in this line, if they were provided with a suitable stand for the purpose.

Danforth's restaurant and lunch room on Central street is meeting with well-deserved success. Mr. Danforth proposes to keep a first-class restaurant in every respect, worthy the patronage of ladies as well as gentlemen, and he sells no liquor, beer or anything of the kind. He will keep Barr's ice cream on hand during the season, and this will draw a host of customers to his rooms during the warm weather.

The case of Selina Bouvay of Thorndike against James Lynes, whom she charged with tearing her skirt, was before the superior court at Springfield on Thursday, and the jury found him not guilty. The complainant caused considerable merriment in the court when, in relating her story, she told of accusing the prisoner of tearing her skirt, when "He said 'Go to h—l,' and I said 'All right, I'll go to Palmer.'"

The editor of the JOURNAL has placed a fine Granger chemical fire extinguisher in his office, and also one at his house. These extinguishers are believed to possess points of excellence superior to any other make, and they are capable of extinguishing any fire quickly in its incipient stages. A handy little pocket guide has just been issued by Passenger Agent Gallup of the Boston & Albany Railroad, which tells "All About the Hotels, Watering Place and Sea Shore Resorts of New York State and New England," giving the names and capacity of the hotels at the different resorts, names of proprietors, prices by the day and week, railroad fares to leading points, etc., with a good map. Summer tourists will find it a very convenient traveling companion and guide.

Oranges have advanced enormously in price within the past few weeks, fruit that was selling a couple of months ago at $5 a case now commanding $16, with the tendency still upward. The consequence is that there are very few oranges in the market, and not many people care to buy at present rates. The high prices are said to be largely due to the fact that the oranges rot badly on the voyage, in many cases fully one-third of the cargo being spoiled in this way.

From the annual report of the New London Northern Railroad Company it appears that during the last fiscal year $32,000 was laid out in improvements, including $10,000 for new freight cars. Besides this a large amount of money was spent in connection with the Fitchburg Railroad in changing the grade at Miller's Falls from a grade crossing to an overhead one. A purchase has also been made of enough steel rails, which are now being laid, to complete the steel rail line to Palmer. The total earnings of the road were $611,043.58, an increase over the previous year of $19,697, of which $199,518.52 was for passenger transportation, an increase over 1880 of $24,249.71, and $345,755.48 for freight transportation. The total operating expenses were $391,577.52. The number of passengers carried in 1881 were 353,815, and tons of freight carried, 400,072. Number of men employed, 500. The road owns 24 passenger and baggage cars, 334 freight cars and 22 locomotives. All passenger train cars are equipped with air brake and Miller platform and coupler, and a part of its freight cars are provided with patented self-coupling.

MEMORIAL DAY.

The organization of a Grand Army Post in this village has given a fresh impetus to the local observance of Decoration Day, and never before has the day been so well observed in Palmer as it was this year. The members of L. L. Merrick Post assembled at the Nassowanno House in the morning, 34 strong, and with 16 veterans not members of the Post, and invited guests, took carriages to visit the different cemeteries, escorted by the Palmer Cornet Band. At the Four Corners cemetery prayer was offered by Rev. C. H. Ricketts of Thorndike; Rev. Mr. Clark of Bondsville offered prayer at the Catholic cemetery, and Rev. Mr. Matthews at the cemetery in this village. Children from the schools were present at each of the cemeteries. After decorating the graves in this village, the Post marched through Main street to the Universalist church, where the members and invited guests, to the number of 80, sat down to a collation, following which sentiments were responded to briefly by Judge Robinson, C. L. Gardner, Col. Tufts, S. S. Taft, Dr. Wm. Holbrook and Rev. E. A. Perry.

It was nearly 3 o'clock before the Post arrived at Wales Hall, to listen to the address by Rev. E. A. Perry. Rev. O. R. Hunt offered prayer, and excellent music was furnished by a quartette of singers and by the band. Mr. Perry's address was listened to by a large and appreciative audience. The speaker said that if an inhabitant of another world should visit this to-day and ask: "What mean these services?" we should tell him that we placed these floral offerings upon the graves of our fallen in recognition of their patriotism. If he should further ask: "What mean you by patriotism?" we might find it difficult to explain. Words that express the deeper feelings of the heart cannot be analyzed and defined. No one can tell why he loves the land of his birth better than any other. True patriotism has certain qualities. Among them are these: Spirit of sacrifice, strong faith in one's land, wisdom and conscientiousness. There is a patriotism that has none of these, which is better known as sentimentalism. Its essential spirit is weakness. Such a patriot loves (?) his land for his own sake. There is a patriotism abounding in the spirit of sacrifice, overflowing with faith, conscientious to the last degree, and yet lacking in wisdom, of which the Irish afford the most striking illustration, which is and should be called a passion. There is a patriotism possessing all these qualities, growing out of the deepest feelings of the heart, which is a principle. This is the only true and reliable patriotism. What does such a patriotism demand of us? When a war-cloud overhangs our land, we must ask these questions: Is our country in the right? Is the question of sufficient importance to warrant the destruction of human lives? Is war or surrender the only alternative? If the answers are, yes, then it is the duty of the patriot to fight to the bitter end of defeat, or the sweet one of victory. But as some must man the yards and steer the war ship in the battle, so some guide the ship of State in the hour of conflict. They may be as useful and as truly patriotic as any who offer their lives upon the battle field. Peace, as well as war, has its foes to conquer. There are to-day foes that assail the life of our nation. Bossism and its twin, political corruption, is one of these. Class spirit, which would array the working man against the capitalist, ignorance, including illiterateness and that want of knowledge of the objects and fundamental principles of our government, the heterogeneousness of our population, the fact of differing and apparently conflicting interests of our nation covering such immense territory, are others. If our republic is to live, every patriot must prepare for war, be ready to battle until the last foe is conquered. In this war all can unite. The old soldiers and those coming and to come to maturity's responsibilities should alike be in line. Let us all be faithful, as the comrades whose sleeping places we have this day covered with flowers were faithful.

MONSON.

A special town meeting is to be held to-day, to elect an assessor to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Joshua Tracy.

The many friends of Chas. F. Clough, from Stafford, Hampden, and Monson, paid him a surpise visit last week Thursday evening, leaving as a testimonial of their friendship a large easy chair and foot rest. The party brought music etc. with them, and spent the evening in a most happy manner.

HAMPDEN.

The places of business and mills were generally closed on Tuesday, and a large gathering of people formed in procession in the afternoon, with W. R. Sessions as marshal, and escorted by the band proceeded to the cemeteries, where the soldiers' graves were decorated by the young ladies. An address on "The Glory of the Fallen" was then delivered in the Congregational church by Rev. S. B. Sweetser of Springfield, and in the evening the band gave a concert.

WEST WARREN.

BRIMFIELD.

The selectmen have received official notice of the passage by Congress, and its approval by the President, of the bill giving the town of Brimfield four condemned cast-iron cannon, to be placed in the lot of the soldiers' monument.

The graduating exercises of the Hitchcock Free High School will occur on Friday, June 16th, with the following graduates: George S. Clark and Cornelius Sugrue of Hardwick; Myron H. Davis, Belchertown; Alice M. and Julia A. Haynes, Sturbridge; Lena L. Carpenter, Belchertown; Frederic A. Charles, Addie L. Green, Jennie E. Livermore and Annie M. Brown, Brimfield.

Decoration Day was observed by the pupils of the Hitchcock Free High School, who decorated the soldiers' monument, and the graves of the soldiers. A game of base ball was commenced in the afternoon between the Clippers of Ware and the Stars of Brimfield. At the third inning, when the score stood Stars 3, Clippers 0, a misunderstanding arose as to a man's being out, which the umpire declined to decide, as he did not see how it occurred. The Stars offered to continue the game with another umpire, but would not play with an umpire who could not or would not see. As this offer was not accepted, the game did not go on.

One of the finest games of base ball ever witnessed in Brimfield was played here last Saturday, between the East Brookfields and the Stars of this place. The game was close, interesting and exciting, and the three hundred spectators fully appreciated it. It was practically a game of pitchers, each trying to excel the other, and both were very effective. Neither club could score until the sixth inning, when the Stars made a spurt and won the game. Walsh led off with a safe hit, Converse followed with a double, thus having men on third and second, and two men out, with Bent at the bat. After six balls and two strikes had been called, Bent sent the next ball flying over the left fielder's head for a home run, thus bringing in three runs, amid the applause of the spectators. The East Brookfields were blanked until the eighth inning, when two men were given their bases on balls, and a double resulted in their only runs. The Stars increased their lead one in the eighth. The score was as follows:

STARS.	A.B.	R.	B.H.	EAST BROOKFIELDS.	A.B.	R.	B.H.
Davis, lf	5	0	1	Wheeler, lf	4	0	2
McIntyre, 1b	5	0	1	J. Hogan, 2b	4	0	2

The only accident reported on Decoration Day was the demolishing of a buggy occupied by Mr. Stevenson of Gilbertville and Miss Nellie Price of Ware, who were struck by the fast express on the B. & A. Railroad, between West Brookfield and Warren, about 6 o'clock in the afternoon. The occupants, strange to say, escaped uninjured.

The off horse on the West Warren stage dropped on Main street in a fit when returning home on the last trip Monday evening. The society for the protection of cruelty to animals ought to have a local officer appointed to investigate cases of this kind, as it is alleged that on this evening the horse had been severely beaten before arriving in the village.

The examination was adjourned Thursday night to 9 o'clock Friday morning, and at time of adjournment M. M. Hennebry and J. B. Weisman had been convicted. The first on two counts was fined $50 and costs in each, amounting to $122.50. J. B. Weisman on two counts was fined $50 and costs on each, amounting to about $110. Both appealed. The other cases were continued.

The ball game last Saturday between the Clippers and Amateurs was easily won by the Clippers, score 32 to 4. The Clippers went to Brimfield Decoration Day to play the Stars of the Hitchcock Free High School, but found that but five of the school boys were to play, the other four being a pitcher and catcher from West Brookfield, second baseman from Wales, and Mr. John Converse, the short stop of the old Hardly Ables of Palmer. The game was discontinued on the third inning by the refusal of the captain of the Stars to play longer, he having become dissatisfied with the decision of the umpire, which was said to be strictly according to the rules, and consequently the game was declared 9 to 0 in favor of the Clippers. When the Stars played here a few weeks since they said they were never used as well by any club they had ever played. The Clippers are sorry they cannot return the compliment.

Decoration Day was one of the finest of the season, the dust being laid and the atmosphere washed by the shower of the night before. At 7 o'clock a. m. J. W. Lawton Post took a 'bus for Ware Center and decorated the graves of soldiers located there, prayer first being offered by Rev. W. S. Tuttle. At 10 o'clock the G. A. R., with 42 men in line and 4 veterans in carriage, commanded by Post Commander C. E. Woodward, Ware branch of Land League 25 men, under the command of John W. Clark, Ancient Order of Hibernians 22 men, under the direction of William J. Cannavan, accompanied by 14 members of the order from Warren, and the St. Jean Baptist Society with 60 men, under the charge of President J. O. Deslauriers, escorted by the Ware Cornet Band, 20 pieces, marched to the cemetery in the rear of the Congregational church, and from thence to the Catholic cemetery, and then to Aspen Grove Cemetery, where prayer was offered by the chaplain of the day, Rev. A. J. Hall. The soldiers' monument was finely trimmed by the class of '84 of the high school. After decorating the graves they then returned to Main street and disbanded. In the afternoon Music Hall was well filled to listen to the address by Major and Hon. Henry Winn of Greenfield, and remarks by local talent. The day passed pleasantly and quietly, no accident or disturbance marring its enjoyment.

"HOW ARE THE MIGHTY FALLEN!"—In a letter from San Antonio, Texas, V. A. Fenner, formerly of Sherman, Conn., says:—"Rev. W. H. H. Murray, 'Adirondack Murray,' as he is called, is here, a fallen giant indeed, with none so poor as to do him reverence. When he fled from Boston his fair-haired private secretary, a young lady, followed his fortunes and has since lived with him. Last year her heart-broken father came for her, and after a despairing effort to get her to return with him, which proved ineffectual, the poor old man, disgraced, broken in spirit, alone in the world, and almost penniless after his long search for her, blew out his brains at the very threshold of Murray's door. Only last Sunday—Sunday, mark you—I saw him at San Pedro Springs unloading, with his own hands, a wagon-load of cedar ties that he had hauled from his little place for the street railroad company. He was without coat, vest or collar, dirty and unshorn, and it would take a keen eye, as a Boston man remarked to me, to detect in him the idolized preacher of one of the proudest pulpits in the Hub."

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

SHILOH'S VITALIZER is what you need for constipation, loss of appetite, dizziness, and all symptoms of dyspepsia. Price 10 and 75 cents per bottle. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it, Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

THE STEINWAY PIANO

IS THE

STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE

Facts, say the professors, are obtained by the concurrent opinion of the largest number of best able to judge. This principle applies to the Steinway pianos, as the largest number of people pronounce them to be the best, and the firm is doing the largest volume of business of any piano-making concern in the world. Purchasers, by paying $75, $100, $150, $200 or $300 more, according to the style, for them than for any other pianos; dealers, by comparing every other piano with them; makers, by putting their pianos below them in price, and then claiming that they are pretty nearly as good, because they "have some of Steinway's workmen," or "foreman from Steinway's," or "use Steinway's scales," etc., all proclaim that

THE STEINWAY

IS THE ACKNOWEDGED STANDARD PIANO,

Not only in this country, but also in Europe it stands as far ahead of all other pianos as it does in America.

This fact deing established that the Steinway is the best, of course the next best is that which is nearest like it, which purchasers can decide for themselves by listening and comparing with the standard.

PIANO CHAIR.

TEACHERS, SCHOLARS and FINISHED AMATEUR AND PROFESSIONAL PLAYERS WILL ALIKE WELCOME IT.

The practice of sitting at a piano or organ practising for hours together, without a support for the back, is tiresome in the extreme, as every player knows; and, giving way to the tired feeling, very many, especially young persons, attempt to rest or relieve themselves by assuming a position which is not only ungraceful, but unnatural and unhealthy, and are often permanently injured thereby. To rest the back, it is not always necessary to incline the body to the rear. The body may lean forward, but if there is something against which the back may be pressed, it affords a sense of support, a feeling of ease which can be obtained in no other way, and really forms a true rest. The ordinary piano stool is not a comfortable seat under any circumstances, yet no material improvement was made upon the original design until this Back Piano Chair was invented. Although this Chair has been before the public but a short time, it has already attracted marked attention, and has gained the highest approval of all who have tested it. We are confident that it will fully meet the needs of thousands who have long been hoping and anxiously looking for some such improvement.

Price, plain, $5.00; plush, $6.00;

With adjustable back, $1.00 extra.

Hard Luck.

A dolphus wore his breeches tight,
Of that he didn't think
When he put on the roller skates
To show off at the Rink.
His first adventure was his ast;
He'll put on skates no more;
He tried to kick the roof all in
And sat down on the floor.

When Dolphy dropped, the girls all laughed,
It was an awful fall,
And when they had their backs all turned
He backed up 'gainst the wall;
He called a friend, took off the skates,
And giving him a wink,
Said: "Jim, lend me that long-tailed coat;
I want to leave this Rink."

FISH AND "MEAT" AS FOOD.

There is some danger, says the Lancet, of the fish question falling out of memory. This is not to be tolerated after the interest which has been excited, and for some time maintained, in connection with this important phase of the food problem. Whatever may be the nutritious value of fish as food—and we believe that to be very great—it must be evident that a full and cheap supply of fish would react so as to produce a lowering of the price of butcher's meat. The "purveyors," as they like to be called, are encouraged, and, in truth, enabled, to keep up the price of flesh because there is nothing to compete with it as a staple of the common food of the people. A revival of the old and healthy habit of living largely on fish would place the meat supply on an entirely new footing. This is manifest on the face of the facts; but what may not be equally apparent, though it is scarcely less noteworthy, is the consideration that nervous diseases and weaknesses increase in a country as the population comes to live on the flesh of the warm-blooded animals. This is a point to which attention has not been adequately directed. "Meat"—using that term in its popular sense—is highly stimulating, and supplies proportionately more exciting than actually nourishing pabulum to the nervous system. The meat-eater lives at high pressure, and is, or ought to be, a peculiarly active organism, like a predatory animal, always on the alert, walking rapidly, and consuming large quantities of oxygen, which are imperatively necessary for the safe disposal of his disassimilated material. In practice we find that the meat-eater does not live up to the level of his food, and as a consequence he cannot, or does not, take in enough oxygen to satisfy the exigencies of his mode of life. Thereupon follow many, if not most of the ills to which highly civilized and luxurious meat-eating classes are liable. This is a physiological view of the food question, and it has bearings on the question of fish supply which ought not to be neglected.

A most extraordinary series of coincidences was noticed in a horse car a day or two ago. Indeed, the occurrence was remarkable enough to upset all the rules that are generally accepted as governing chances and averages. Seven young ladies were perceived in the car, of whom not one had both gloves on, and none were wholly bare-handed. Of these four had gloves on their right hands and three on their left, and in every instance the ungloved hand lay in the lap above the other. All the seven bare hands had diamond rings on them, and whenever any attentions were needed by the hair or raiment of the ladies, in every instance the ungloved hand was employed to bestow them, and in the necessary movements the stones flashed and glittered very much. And when, as happened in process of time, the seven young ladies left the car one after the other, four of them waved their left hands to the conductor to direct him to stop, and the other three agitated their right hands, and again the rings sparkled quite copiously. All of which was very curious and interesting to the scientific mind.—Boston Journal.

An enormous pigeon roost in the neighborhood of Sparta, Wisconsin, is attracting the attention of sportsmen. The roost is in a dense pinery, and is about half a mile wide and ten miles long. Every tree contains from twenty to thirty nests. The birds must number millions. They leave their nests at about 4 a. m. in search of food. Their feeding range is five miles wide and thirty miles long. They return to the roost in the afternoon. Hunters have shot and trapped thousands of them.

'Lor,' missus,' said an old darkey, 'what mek you pay money fur to send de chile to school? I got one smart boy, Jonas, but I larns him myself.' 'But, Aunt Charlotte,' replied the lady, 'how can you teach the child when you don't know one letter from another?' 'How I teach him?' said the woman. 'I jis mek him tek de book an set down on de flo', and den I say, 'Jonas, you tek ye eye from dat book, much less leggo him, an' I skin's you alive!''

On the 4th day of May the United States man-of-war Brooklyn was run into by a steam-tug and cut down to the water's edge, in the harbor of Montevideo. The fact is, the United States navy should not be exposed in this way. Whenever it goes out alone it always gets into trouble. They should send a man with it, when it travels, or else put it in the care of the conductor.—Burlington Hawkeye.

If you are so terribly nervous that every stupid thing frightens you, avoid the looking glass.

'Drink,' says an exchange, 'weakens the system, but strengthens the breath.'

Parents who allow their children to grow up with scrofulous humors bursting from every pore, are guilty of a great wrong. Think of them pointed out as branded with a loathsome disease, and you will readily procure them the Cuticura Remedies. j

CUTICURA,

THE NEW BLOOD PURIFIER RESOLVENT.

Mr. Albert Kingsbury, Keene, N. H., troubled with bad humor on hands and neck, caused by lead poisoning. (He's a painter.) At times it would break out, crack open, and the skin separate from the flesh in large pieces, suffering great continual itching and stinging. Purchased your remedies; used Cuticura Resolvent internally, and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap externally, and in less than three months effected a complete cure, and has not been troubled since. Corroborated by Bullard & Foster, Druggists, N. H.

MOTHER DIED FROM IT.

J. W. Adams, Newark, Ohio, says: "Cuticura Remedies are the greatest medicines on earth. Had the worst case salt rheum in this county. My mother had it twenty years, and in fact died from it. I believe Cuticura would have saved her life. My arms, breast and head were covered for three years, which nothing relieved or cured until I used the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) internally, and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap externally.

PSORIASIS.

H. E. Carpenter, Esq., Henderson, N. Y., cured of Psoriasis or Leprosy, of twenty years' standing, by the Cuticura Resolvent internally, and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap externally. The most wonderful case on record. Cure certified to before a justice of the peace and prominent citizens. All afflicted with itching and scaly diseases should send to us for this testimonial in full.

SALT RHEUM.

Those who have experienced the torments of Salt Rheum can appreciate the agonies I endured for years, until cured by the Cuticura Resolvent internally, and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap externally. Mrs WM. PELLINGTON, Sharon, Wis.

VARIOUS CAUSES—

Advancing years, care, sickness, disappointment, and hereditary predisposition—all operate to turn the hair gray, and either of them inclines it to shed prematurely. Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore faded or gray, light or red hair to a rich brown or deep black, as may be desired. It softens and cleanses the scalp, giving it a healthy action. It removes and cures dandruff and humors. By its use falling hair is checked, and a new growth will be produced in all cases where the follices are not destroyed or the glands decayed. Its effects are beautifully shown on brashy, weak, or sickly hair, on which a few applications will produce the gloss and freshness of youth. Harmless and sure in its results, it is incomparable as a dressing, and is especially valued for the soft lustre and richness of tone it imparts.

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR is colorless; contains neither oil nor dye; and will not soil white cambric; yet it lasts long on the hair, and keeps it fresh and vigorous, imparting an agreeable perfume.

SAD ACCIDENT.

MR. OSCAR CRAIG Blown up by a Premature Blast in the Rosendale Cement Quarry—DESTRUCTION of an EYE—Its Subsequent removal by Surgical Operation.

Mr. Oscar Craig was foreman in a cement quarry at Rosendale, Ulster Co., N. Y. By an explosion one day in the quarry he lost an eye—lost it totally. Under the impression that the matter was less serious the local physician told Mr. Craig that his eye was not lost wholly, but could be saved by treatment. The experiment was tried and failed. Worse remained behi , for he was in danger of losing the other also, through sympathetic inflammation. In this strait he consulted DR. DAVID KENNEDY, of Rondout, N. Y., who told him the injured eye must be taken out to save the other. To this Mr. Craig demurred, and went back home in doubt. His local physician said: "Go to New York." To New York the patient went, and one of the most eminent oculists in the country, having looked at the case, said: "You have lost one eye entirely; go back and do what you can to save the other." Briefly, Dr. Kennedy removed the ruined eye and treated Mr. Craig with "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" to build up the system, and the result was successful.

Dr. Kennedy's success as a surgeon is due to the use of "Favorite Remedy" in the after treatment.

Are you troubled with Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Constipation or Derangement of the Kidneys and Bladder? then use Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." It will not disappoint you. Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists. 4w8

After the Adjournment.

Now the country legislator
Raketh out his little satchel
From the closet in his bedroom,
Rolleth up his extra dickey,
Extra collar, extra necktie,
Extra cuffs, extra stockings,
Packs them in his little satchel,
Hies him from the Ancient City.

When upon his native heather,
In the country where he came from,
Where the brooks go rippling seaward,
Where the peach crop can't be trusted;
Where the squash and yellow pumpkin,
Cantaloupe and watermelon,
Grow to sizes so enormous,
Find their way into the sanctums
Of the editors of papers,
And are duly noticed therein—
He is everything to all men.
Here the country store he hastens,
Sits him down upon a barrel,
Where clerk has hung the sign out:
"Cheap for cash" upon a pasteboard.

Gather round him then the voters
Of the town and of the county,
And he tells them all the story
Of the session that has ended;
Tells them of the great men gathered
In the House and in the Senate;
Tells them how he passed the dog law
For their county, and the sheep law,
And the fence law, and the gate law,
Till they think him, too, a great man,
And make up their minds that they will Send him back to the next session.

But there is another chapter
To the tale of the Adjournment;
For the country legislator
Does not dare to tell the voters
Of the county that he came from
All the story of the session.
He will never dare to tell them
How he played a game of poker
In the hotel near the State House;
He will never dare to tell them
How he played it all the session.
Played it week days, played it Sundays,
Played it nights and noons and mornings,
Played it with the playful members
Of the City Delegation.
He could never tell the voters
Of the county that he came from
How the lucky poker players
Of the City Delegation
Skinned him of his scant per diem,
Won the watch he used to carry,
Then the chain and seal attachment;
Won the studs upon his shirt-front,
And the ring upon his finger;
Won the full dress suit that cost him
Sixty dollars in the city.
Would not even let him have it
For the Governor's reception.

He could never tell the voters
Of the country that he came from
How the lucky poker players
Of the City Delegation
Won a mortgage on his farm lands,
On his sheep and on his horses,
On his cows and on his peach crop
That he hopes to raise this summer.

Oh, ye country legislators,
Take a warning from this story,
Never try the game of poker
With the lucky poker players
Of the City Delegation.

LILY'S LOVERS.

A solitary figure, with few lines of comeliness or grace, John Holloway sat upon the meadow gate, looking off into the distance. He was whistling softly, and yet he seemed to be in deep reverie, for his great tender eyes had a far-away expression in their brown depths as he gazed over the sun-lit meadows where the blood-red clover and the golden butternuts swayed under the soft, caressing breeze. Suddenly an imperious voice broke the silence:

'Mr. Holloway, please let me take down the bars. I'm in a hurry and came the shortest way.'

The young man started; he had not heard her approach, and there beside him stood the very object of his thoughts.

Ah, clover blooms and buttercups, paled were your charms now! A lithe, graceful figure in the daintiest of cambric dresses, and underneath the wide hat a sweet, girlish face with velvety, peach-tinted cheeks, and eyes as blue as freshly gathered violets. Such was Lily Lawrence, the prettiest girl—so the popular verdict ran—in all the country round. A flush rose to John's sun-browned face as he quickly rose and began to take down the bars.

'Out for a walk, Miss Lily?'

'Yes,' very briefly.

'So you are fond of quiet strolls? I am, too.'

'Really, Mr. Holloway, I don't see what it is to you——'

Then she stopped. She did not mean to be rude, but truly, she thought to herself, it was high time she should show this young man that his openly expressed admiration was exceedingly distasteful to her. It had been going on for some time, and every one, even Lily herself, had come to see that the sun rose and set for John Holloway where she was.

'He must be intensely stupid not to know how utterly indifferent I am to him,' she thought.

But John was not stupid. He understood the unfinished sentence, and as he drew back without another word to let her pass, Lily saw that he did, and a shame-faced, compunctious look stole into her eyes. For, from the richest to the poorest, every one acknowledged John Holloway's noble, sterling character.

Lily walked slowly along the road, half determined to turn back and apologize for her rudeness, until a turn in the road brought her face to face with some one whose handsome eyes met her own with such a glad welcome that all other thoughts were for a time driven completely away.

It was Richard Blake, the most admired and courted young man in the village.

'Ah, good afternoon, Miss Lawrence! I was hoping I would meet you.'

And the wavy black locks were bared to the breeze as Richard courteously lifted his hat and walked on beside her.

What a contrast to John Holloway! And the contrast was greater in many other ways than Lily thought. But the girl was but young to read character, and that Richard Blake was very handsome and elegant none could deny—a lover of whom any one might be justly proud.

When Lily's home was reached, and with another graceful bow Richard had left her, she did not go directly into the house, but lingered awhile among the flowers that filled their little garden. Her thoughts were very busy. She knew that she had behaved very unkindly to her old friend, and her memory went back to the first time she had met him. It was at a picnic, and she had fallen and sprained her ankle. She remembered how the great fellow, so much stronger than his mates, had persisted in carrying her all the long distance back to her home. Since then he had shown in a hundred ways what she was to him, and knowing his noble nature, perhaps her heart would have gone out to him before this if Richard Blake had not come back from college.

But he had, and Lily fancied his gay, debonair manners, and his entertaining conversation, and like many another young girl, had begun to take for true, heart-deep love that liking which we all have for things pleasant to the sight.

And so she shook off her reproachful feelings and went into the house.

'Why, mother dear, what is the matter? Crying, and I out enjoying myself! Tell me, what is it, dear? Let me share your troubles.'

Mrs. Lawrence lifted a face smiling through her tears.

'Yes, crying, Lily, but not from grief. Sit down here beside me, and let me show you what a load has been lifted from my mind this morning. Lily, I did not tell you, but some time ago Mr. Burton, the lawyer, came to me and informed me that the holder of the mortgage on our home was in need of money, and intended to foreclose, unless the mortgage was paid in full when he should demand it. Now, child, you know what a trouble has been weighing upon me, for I knew that it would be impossible for me to raise the sum necessary, and that we must leave the dear old home that we had loved so well. And now, this very morning Mr. Burton came and told me that a kind friend, hearing of the expected foreclosure, has paid the amount in full.'

'Who is it that has helped you?'

'That's the strange part of it, Lily. Mr. Burton said that he had strictly promised not to tell the name of my benefactor, and as to who it can be I have no idea.'

But though she did not say so, Lily had, and when later, in her usual impulsive way, she told John Holloway how sorry she was that she had been so rude to him, and then asked him frankly whether he was not the kind friend who had come so opportunely to her mother's relief, his manner confirmed her suspicion.

It is said that "gratitude is neighbor to love," and whether that be true or not, it is certain that from that time the manly young farmer was often in Lily's thoughts, while Richard Blake was just as steadily losing ground. But John of course did not know it. He was not one to wear his heart on his sleeve, and at length, after a hard struggle, had decided to abandon his hopeless suit and leave the field to that rival who evidently was the favored one. Lily noticed the difference; but, womanlike, she did not appear to care, and so the months went by much the same, until at length the crisis came.

The village in which our heroine lived was just on the shore of a little bay, and many were the pleasure parties that enjoyed a trip over its limpid waters.

One afternoon, Richard Blake, obtaining Mrs. Lawrence's consent, invited Lily to take a sail.

When they reached the beach, who should be waiting in readiness to manage the boat but John Holloway.

'Hallo, Holloway, are you turning into boatman?' exclaimed Blake, in astonishment.

Lifting his cap to Lily, John answered:

'Not exactly; but Joe came to me in great distress, saying he did not feel well enough to go out, but had promised not to disappoint you, and knowing I could manage a boat, he asked me to take his place. Joe has done me many a good turn, and so I could not refuse him,' he added, wrongfully interpreting the little flush that had risen in Lily's face as she had listened; 'and he said, too, that it was your sister that was to be your companion, else I should not have come; I would not for the world be a marplot.'

The bitterness in his tone touched a like chord in Lily's heart. For some time back she had been slowly but surely learning a lesson—the difference between real worth and mere glitter; and now her heart sank as she saw, or thought she saw, how completely her conduct had driven all affection toward her from John's mind, and that she had foolishly thrown away her own happiness.

'Well, Holloway, I'm much obliged. It's very kind of you,' was Blake's reply.

And the two young men soon had the little craft in readiness for its fair freight. Blake had seen John's liking for Lily, but his vanity had not been alarmed; he knew by experience the power of his dark eyes, and Lily Lawrence was like any other young lady, if she were ten times prettier. So he reasoned.

They floated lightly over the blue water, anchoring after awhile under a bluff, and dropping their lines to fish. Lily chatted gayly in her own fascinating way, and never had she seemed more lovely in Richard Blake's eyes, while poor John, who had thought of late that he had driven her image from his mind, felt the old charm creeping over him again stronger than ever before; but he hid his pain manfully, and kept his part in the lively conversation.

Time crept on, and just as they decided on returning, to their dismay the heavens suddenly clouded over, and a peal of thunder brought them to their feet in alarm. Squalls were not common upon the bay, but one was evidently now upon them, and John saw the danger. A moment, and they were dashing at a mad rate over the waves, while overhead the awful darkness gathered more ominously all the while, and every now and then vivid flashes of flame seemed to envelop them on all sides.

Suddenly there was a blinding glare, then a terrific crash, and half the mast dropped over the bows, while the sails were dragged into the seething water. For an instant John was almost stunned; then his first thought was Lily. Where was she? A second more, and he caught the gleam of yellow hair in the cruel waves among the tattered sails; the ropes had twisted about her light figure and dragged her over the bow.

He sprang to Blake's side.

'If she is to be yours, it is you who ought to save her! Quick, or it will be too late! Your chance will be gone!'

But Blake still cowered tremblingly where he was, unheeding the peril of the one he professed to love.

Another instant, John was struggling among the sails; a few seconds of awful suspense while the waves were tugging savagely at him; then, weak, almost fainting, he crept back into the boat, with Lily's insensible form clasped close to his brave heart. He had saved her.

Then, still in imminent danger, they remained clinging to the dismantled boat, until, as suddenly as it had fallen, the squall lifted, and a welcome hail from the shore proclaimed that help was at hand.

Lily came to herself at last, to find that John was holding her fast, with her face close to his own.

In an instant the memory of what had occurred came back to her. She did not draw away, but raised her lustrous eyes to his as if to read his inmost thoughts; then the cold cheek pressed itself closer against his own, while her arms wound themselves softly around his neck.

'John—Dear John!' was all she said.

And John knew that with the greatest peril the greatest blessing of his life had come to him; while Richard Blake, looking on with pale, scowling face, comprehended clearly that John's words had been prophetic when he had said, 'Your chance will be gone.'

PARENTS, ATTENTION!

All parents, mothers especially, who have children exposed to perils similar to those which surrounded the unfortunate victim of the murder tragedy in New Haven—and in great cities who shall say that any young boy or girl may not be so endangered?—should read thoughtfully the following from the Providence Journal: It is not necessary to anticipate the verdict of the jury in the case now on trial at New Haven, in order to point a moral as pertinent as it is obvious. Jennie Cramer was a beautiful girl, whose parents did not sufficiently control her actions; the Malley boys were wild reprobates, whose parents did not, apparently, control them at all. Waiving any consideration of the offense for which the Malley boys are on trial, it is admitted that they, in connection with an attractive and wicked woman from New York, attempted the ruin of Jennie Cramer. There was not any evidence that Jennie was either naturally or by habit a bad wanton; she was a lover of pleasure; she had been flattered for her beauty, and the innocent license of company was more agreeable than the atmosphere and restraints of home. It is to be said for her parents that seeing, they attempted to prevent the danger to which she was exposing herself, but in a manner which evidences a want of discipline which has had such a terrible result.

To say nothing of the boys, how is it in regard to the girls? What is the proportion of mothers who are on such terms with their daughters that they know what they are reading, where they spend their social hours, what company they keep at all times and generally the tendency of their thoughts? If this topic is not one to be elaborated in the daily paper, it is one which is not concluded by the brief terms of the police reports, nor illustrated by the isolated criminal trial. The whole tendency of our ordinary life is toward segregation of the members of the family, and more particularly toward the separation of parents and children as companions and confidants. Under the most favorable circumstance this is an incalculable evil. In the many, it is not only that there is lost so much of social enjoyment and improvement; that there is indifference where there should be affection, distrust where there should be mutual faith, but there is a positive moral deterioration where there is no purposed wrong to the individual, or crime against society. Utter passiveness, not to say active repugnance, is a cause as well as exemption of disease. There may be a poisoning of the moral forces as invidious, as silent, as fatal as the poisoning of the blood.

HIS PRESCRIPTION.

Up in New Hampshire is a well known eccentric individual, a self-constituted curer of ills; a sort of universal panacea, "body and soul, head, heart, and conscience doctor," who, with all his eccentricities, has a fund of actual wit that is hard to beat. Not long ago the "doctor" was called upon the witness stand. The opposing counsel, who is said to sometimes indulge in 'liquor pizen,' knowing the doctor's peculiarities, ventured, in cross-examining him, to show him up a bit. The result will be appreciated.

'What is your business,' pompously inquired the counsel.

'My business is to do what little good I can do to my fellow-men,' modestly replied the doctor.

'But that doesn't answer my question, gruffly remarked the counsel. 'How do you spend your time?'

'Why, squire, it takes about all my time to do what I said.'

'But I want something more definite,' stoutly demanded the counsel. 'How do you go about your business?'

'That depends on circumstances, according to the nature of the case,' explained the doctor: 'For instance, if I were going to begin on you, the first thing I should do would be to advise you to sign a temperance pledge!'

The court roared, and the counsel, as if convinced the doctor was pursuing a legitimate and respectable vocation, proceeded with the regular cross-examination.

OATMEAL FOOD.

The appetite often craves food which the stomach rejects; but a long period of forcing enables it to receive it under protest. Nor is it the quantity of food that is nourishing, but the quality. A pound of choice meat at twenty cents is worth as much nutriment as two pounds of inferior meat at ten cents. An egg is one of the best and most nutritious articles of diet that can be put on the table, and the less it is cooked the more valuable its digestive and assimilating properties. Since oatmeal has become a delicacy, retailing all the way from four to twenty-five cents a pound, according to localities, people of wealth add it to their cuisine as a valuable breakfast dish. Carlyle says of Lord Macaulay, "Well, any one can see that you are an honest sort of a fellow, made out of oatmeal." There is a story told of a shrewd Scotch woman who used to tell her fine, healthy bairns, "the one that eats the mast parritch will get the mast meat." And when the meat came there was no room for it.

The apologist for a national dish says: "If oatmeal can make such men as Sir Walter Scott, Dr. Chalmers and Lord Macaulay, we may heap high the porridge dish and bribe our children to eat it. One thing we do know. It is far better for the blood and brain than cake, confectionery and the score of delicacies on which many pale children are fed by foolish mothers."

A fellow, a little deaf, went into a theatre the other day, where a pantomine was going on. For five minutes he contented himself with listening with all his might, leaning forward, making an ear trumpet with his hand, etc. At last, finding himself still unsuccessful, he rises, and cries out in a rage, 'Louder! louder, I tell you! Nobody can hear that!'—French.

A negro witness at Pittsburg testified that he did not board with Mrs. Reynolds but that he "batched" with her. Pressed to explain, he said: "I buys de wittles, Mrs. Reynolds cooks 'em, I eats 'em, and dey calls that 'batching.'"

The newest floral sentiment: "If you wish for heart's ease don't look to marigold."

I Wonder Why.

I wonder why it is that some
Through all their days and nights and years,
Gather the sunshine of this life,
And others only clouds and tears?

I wonder why it is that some
Dance, laugh, and jest, while others weep?
That some no wakeful hours see,
While some know not what 'tis to sleep?

I wonder why it is that balm
Into some lives is always poured,
While others know not what it is
To hear a sympathetic word?

Think not I jeer or murmur at
This mixture of life's bliss and woe.
Think not I grumble or repine,
I only wonder that it's so.

For many a heart when touched by grief
Would bask in sunshine like its mate,
And could appreciate a change
Although its coming might be late.

But long as life goes on there'll be
For some, rich bliss, for others, woe;
And though I murmur not, or sigh,
I wonder that it must be so.

THE CROSS MARK.

The mark which persons who are unable to write are required to make instead of their signature is in the form of a cross, and this practise, having been formerly followed by kings and nobles, is constantly referred to as an instance of the deplorable ignorance of ancient times. This signature is not, however, invariable proof of such ignorance. Anciently, the use of this mark was not confined to illiterate persons; for among the Saxons the mark of the cross, as an attestation of good faith of the persons signing, was required to be attached to the signature of those who could write, as well as to stand in the place of the signature of those who could not write. In those times, if a man could write or even read, his knowledge was considered proof positive that he was in holy orders. The word clericus, or clerk, was synonymous with penman, and the laity, or people who were not clerks, did not feel any urgent necessity for the use of letters.

The ancient use of the cross was therefore universal alike by those who could and by those who could not write. It was, indeed, the symbol of an oath from its early associations, and called generally the mark. On this account Mr. Charles Knight, in his notes in the 'Pictorial Shakespeare,' explains the expression of 'God save the mark' as a form of ejaculation approaching to the character of an oath. The phrase occurs three or more times in the plays of Shakespeare, but for a long time was left by the commentators in its original obscurity.—Manchester Times.

MISTAKEN KINDNESS.

Mormon wagons took sunflowers along with them on their way to Utah, and Iowa farmers have had a hard time fighting the pest. A single Scotch thistle planted in Victoria—the Scotchmen there had a congratulatory dinner over it twenty years ago—has covered tens of thousands of acres, and been the destruction of farms. The scattered grain emptied from the bags of German troops in the Revolution knocked millions off the grain crops for all time to come by bringing the Hessian fly. A careless man set out a French grape-cutting a few years ago with phylloxera on it, and the pest is now sprinkled along the Pacific coast, creeping inland. Its ravages in France have cost $400,000,000. A man with a taste for peppery greens planted a water-cress in New Zealand, and the little plant has spread so that the local legislature has to appropriate a round sum yearly to improve the water-cress out of existence and the water-courses. A kindly, misguided man brought over to New York a basketful of sparrows, not twenty years ago, and the little wretches have already driven half our song-birds into the woods. In South America the same thing was done, and the birds are cleaning out the fruit crop; they will here some day. Natural selection is occasionally wiser in finding a place for men and animals than men.

A LEGEND.

There was a dispute among three maidens as to which had the most beautiful hand. One sat by a stream, and dipped her hand into the water, and held it up; another plucked strawberries until the ends of her fingers were pink; and another gathered violets until her hands were fragrant. An old haggard woman passing by asked, "Who will give me a gift? for I am poor." All three denied her; but another who sat near, unwashed in the stream, unstained with fruit, unadorned with flowers, gave her a little gift, and satisfied the poor woman. And then she asked them what was the dispute, and they told, and lifted up before her their beautiful hands. "Beautiful indeed," said she, when she saw them. But when they asked her which was the most beautiful, she said, "It is not the hand that is washed clean in the brook, it is not the hand that is tipped with red, it is not the hand that is garlanded with fragrant flowers, but it is the hand that gives to the poor which is the most beautiful." As she said these words her wrinkles fled, her staff was thrown away, and she stood before them an angel from heaven with authority to decide the question in dispute.

It is a fact that to make, sell, or use strong drink is the great sin of the age. It is a fact that strong drinks do no good, but must harm when they are drunk. Why, then, use them? It is a fact, that if one will take and keep the pledge, it will save him from a great deal of harm and woe. Now, try it, and thus be safe.

A way has been found for making old postal cards useful. Cut lengthwise into strips about an eighth of an inch wide they make excellent lamp-lighters which burn readily, do not throw off sparks, and leave scarcely a trace of ashes.

Temperance puts wood on the fire, meal in the barrel, flour in the sack, money in the pocket, credit in the country, contentment in the house, and clothes on the children.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1882.

GEN. Garibaldi, the Italian soldier and patriot whose name is familiar in all lands, and to whom Italy is indebted more than to any other one man for her present position among the nations of the world, died last week Friday evening at his farm in Caprera, at the age of nearly 75 years.

MR. BLAINE declines the call of his Maine friends who are anxious to have him run for Congress again. He expresses the modest conviction that his candidacy is not essential to the success of the Republican party in that State, and therefore feels it his duty to look after his long-neglected private affairs.

THE Malley trial at New Haven is at a stand-still, on account of the sickness of one of the jurors,an old man, who may not recover. In this event the case would have to be gone over with again before a new jury. The jury laws of Connecticut and a good many other States need some common sense changes to meet such emergencies as these.

A NICE little plan is said to have been devised under the gilded dome at Boston for making the gubernatorial ticket Long and Noyes next fall. Long is then to be elected to the U. S. Senate in the winter, as a happy compromise between Hoar and Boutwell, and the child-like Noyes will then blandly step into the Governor's chair. It is a pretty plan, but may be said to be too utterly too too.

BOSTONIANS hasten to do homage to the rising sun. Collector Worthington was entertained at dinner by the Middlesex Club last Saturday, and Gov. Long, President Bishop of the Senate, and other notables were present to dispense taffy. They were especially sweet on his civil service reform ideas, and were doubtless wise in expressing their praise thus early in his official career, for if he practices the kind of reform he has been preaching, there won't be much praise left after a time. But he may find it advisable not to do this.

THERE was a queer little commotion in the Senate chamber at Washington last week Friday, caused by a letter from David Davis, the president pro tem., designating Senator Ingalls to take the chair during his unavoidable absence. A lively debate at once sprang up, some of the Senators fearing that in case President Arthur should die during the day Senator Ingalls would thereupon become acting President, and to avoid this danger they finally adjourned. It would seem to be in order for the Senate to devise some measure which will allow the president pro tem. of that body to be absent a day or two if necessary, without seriously endangering the stability of the government.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR has nominated ex-Vice President William A. Wheeler of New York as chairman of the tariff commission, the other members being John L. Hayes of Massachusetts, Henry W. Oliver, Jr., of Pennsylvania, Austin M. Garland of Illinois, Jacob Ambler of Ohio, John S. Phelps of Missouri, Robert P. Porter of the District of Columbia, John W. H. Underwood of Georgia and Duncan L. Kenner of Louisiana. Most of the members seem to have been selected to represent some special interest. Few of them are known to fame, and the amount of revision the tariff will receive at their hands is not likely to be large, nor the influence their recommendations will have upon Congress.

The enlargement of the Welland Canal, commenced in 1872, is very nearly completed. The cost when finished is estimated at thirteen millions of dollars, and it will accommodate vessels of one thousand tons. This expenditure has been made by Canada upon the supposition that the canal will divert transportation from the railroads of the United States, as well as from the Erie Canal.

A party of 175 Italian immigrants arrived at New York the other day, who are practically slaves, having agreed to pay the men who brought them over a certain sum per diem for a term of years, in return for having their fares paid. This is as bad as the Chinese coolie immigration, which has made so much trouble on the Pacific slope.

The recent increase in ocean telegraph rates has resulted in the formation of an English company which intends to lay two new cables between England and the United States with as little delay as possible. The tariff to the public will be 25 cents a word, with a rebate to stockholders.

Dr. John F. Gray, the first physician in America to adopt the medical system of Hahnemann, died at New York on Monday. He took up the system in 1826. Now there are over 6000 physicians in this country who believe that like cures like.

Next Wednesday will be Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe's 70th birthday, and in honor of the anniversary Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. will give a garden party at "The Old Elm," the residence of Hon. William Claflin, in Newtonville.

Last Sunday evening, during a fierce gale, a schooner was wrecked off South Haven, Mich., on Lake Michigan, and all on board were drowned in sight of the people on shore, who were unable to render assistance.

Bishop Gilmour of Cleveland, O., has raised a commotion in that city by threatening to excommunicate any Catholic woman of his diocese who attends any meeting of the Woman's Land League.

Over 900 tickets to Springfield were sold at this station on Wednesday,to people who were anxious to "see the elephant," and the morning accomodation train left here about half an hour late, with eighteen cars and an engine at each end. THE MEETINGS AT ST. PAUL'S CHURCH.

The annual session of the Union Association of Universalists, which was held at St. Paul's church in this place on Wednesday and Thursday, was attended by a large number of delegates and others from the surrounding towns, and was a series of interesting and profitable meetings. The forenoon of Wednesday was occupied in the transaction of business, and perfecting the machinery for future work. Rev. M. H. Harris of Worcester was chosen president, Rev. F. A. Bisbee of Spencer clerk and treasurer, Rev. E. S. Chaffee of No. Orange, Willard Putnam of Cooleyville and Mrs. B. V. Stevenson of Hardwick an executive committee. At 12.30 a bountiful collation was spread in the dining room, and the business gave way to the social and gastronomic.

At 2 p. m. the president called to order, and the work began. Rev. B. V. Stevenson gave what, according to his idea, should be taught in the Sunday school. One may have fine sheep if he takes good care of the lambs. The whole aim of the Sunday school is to make Christians of the children. Those things and those only should be taught that will do this. Rev. D. S. Chaffee spoke upon the topic, "How shall we Teach?" He said we must teach simply, thoroughly and with a definite purpose. Rev. R. T. Sawyer followed with an exhaustive essay upon the question "How can we secure the attention of the Children at the Sunday school?" He would have the instruction in the Sunday school of such a character that children would desire to attend church. He would have the Sunday school prepare them for church attendance. He would also have the preaching more suitable for them, that they might be more interested and instructed. Rev. E. A. Perry declared that parents were to blame, for they did not take their children to church, as was the custom in the past. He would have occasional special services for the children, yet there was danger in special services. People would get into the habit of coming only at such times. Yet children might come on such occasions and, enjoying the services, come again. It was also a good thing to recognize the little folks as an important part of a parish. He would have the ordinary sermons more simple in language, construction, and lighted up with illustrations, that children might be able to comprehend. A discussion participated in by Rev. Dr. Emerson of Boston, Revs. J. P. Quimby, W. A. Start, B. V. Stevenson and others followed.

In the evening a preaching service was held. Revs. W. H. Dearborn of Hartford, Conn., and J. K. Mason of Springfield, assisted. Rev. M. H. Harris preached the sermon, from the words, "Until Christ be formed in you." Christ had two striking qualities. His union with God, which was absorption in Him, and His love for man. Christ is formed in us only as these two things are true of us.

At 8.30 Thursday morning a spirited conference meeting was held. Rev. E. W. Pierce of Chicopee presided, and a large number participated. The topic for consideration was "The Value of Public Worship." At 9.30 the Association was called to order and a few matters of business attended to. Rev. J. P. Quimby then spoke of his method of raising money for missionary purposes. He was followed by Rev. Mr. Waite, who proceeded to speak of the great opportunities for missionary work now before the Universalist church, not only in the great West, but even in Massachusetts. Many fields are white for the harvest. Mr. Waite felt that the Universalist church was not doing all it should or could to extend its borders. It did not, perhaps, as deeply as it ought, have the missionary spirit. The habit of giving is not cultivated as it should be. Rev. W. A. Start, State missionary, had a paper upon "The Importance of interesting the Young in Missionary Work." A discussion followed, participated in by a large number. The meeting was felt to be a very valuable one. At 12.30 another bountiful collation was partaken of by a larger number than on the day before.

At 2 o'clock the Association came together for the final session. In addition to the usual opening exercises, Miss Weller, the soprano of St. Paul's, Miss Jennie Kenerson presiding at the organ, rendered a beautiful solo. The topic for presentation was "What kind of Preaching the World Needs." Rev. J. K. Mason declared that the world needed preaching that was evangelical, literally the gospel; sincere, learned, not pedantic; sympathetic, earnest. Love of God should be the basis of all preaching. Rev. F. A. Bisbee said that the world's need varies at different times. It needs always that preaching which accords with the best interpretation of the truth at that particular age. The need of the present age was best met by the preaching of the universal principle of love. The former speaker dwelt upon the qualities, and the latter upon the substance of the preaching the world needs. It was felt by all that a series of profitable and interesting meetings had been held. The Association adjourned to meet at the call of the clerk.

It is amusing to see how some persons will squirm when called upon to testify under oath, to tell "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth." The complaints and trials of liquor dealers for violations of law have furnished considerable excitement for the past few days. Evidence of violations seems to be sufficient, and guilty parties will undoubtedly meet just punishment at Northampton next week, as nearly all such cases lately do before our courts. The trials were attended by a goodly number of respectable citizens, showing their interest in all proper efforts to enforce the law by the authorities of the town, who had supposed they had granted as many licenses as the average license man could wish, and much more than the prohibitionists could approve. Of course there is quite a minority of our citizens who favor free rum and a free fight. While there are more of that class than there should be, they are still in a great minority in our town. The license system never has had so fair a test in this town as for the present year, though they have some tough and determined cases to deal with. It is certain the selectmen mean business. It remains to be seen whether the town means restraint or free rum. No sensible man can fail to see the results.

Sometimes a little assistance at the right time will enable the system to throw off an attack which might otherwise result in serious sickness. Ayer's Pills should always be kept at hand, and promptly taken for the relief of slight ailments, before they become formidable diseases.

After reading all the advertisements of Spring medicine and blood purifiers, we advise the use of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Impurities of the blood, though their name be legion, tremble and fear before it. It is the king of all blood purifiers, and the best of all medicines for Spring disorders.

Sold by all druggists. Ask for AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and do not be persuaded to take any other. Price $1; six bottles for $5.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE. For sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. For sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it, Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston. wholesale agents. 1y32

THE STEINWAY PIANO

IS THE

STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE

Facts, say the professors, are obtained by the concurrent opinion of the largest number of best able to judge. This principle applies to the Steinway pianos, as the largest number of people pronounce them to be the best, and the firm is doing the largest volume of business of any piano-making concern in the world. Purchasers, by paying $75, $100, $150, $200 or $300 more, according to the style, for them than for any other pianos; dealers, by comparing every other piano with them; makers, by putting their pianos below them in price, and then claiming that they are pretty nearly as good, because they "have some of Steinway's workmen," or "foreman from Steinway's," or "use Steinway's scales," etc., all proclaim that

THE STEINWAY

IS THE ACKNOWEDGED STANDARD PIANO,

Not only in this country, but also in Europe it stands as far ahead of all other pianos as it does in America.

This fact being established that the Steinway is the best, of course the next best is that which is nearest like it, which purchasers can decide for themselves by listening and comparing with the standard.

Playing Train.

Listen to the merry strain
Of our darling, "playing train;"
Toot! toot! toot! Now steam up well—
All aboard—ding, ding-dong-bell!

Every chair, I do declare,
In the house is surely there;
"Clear the track," conductor cries,
See the engine, how she flies.

Sure, our boy is "on a bender,"
With his baggage-car and tender,
Who'd expect that such a raid
Ever was, or could be, made?

Looking-glass for lamp reflector—
Syringe for a steam injector,
And the engine, who could match her?
"Toasting-fork" for the cow-catcher.

Brakemen at their posts all stand,
Turn the brakes with steady hand,
"Brooms tied on"—for brakes, you know,
Answers every purpose, though.

Ah! you little mischief-maker,
Mamma'll ride if you will take her.
Some day she will miss the strain
Of her darling, "playing train."

MIRACLES.

'Do we believe in miracles, Alonzo?' Well, we should preach. When a man can sit down in a New York restaurant and have brook trout, spring chicken, venison steak and reed bird served off the same soup bone, we are ready to take in any miracle you ever saw in print. Believe in miracles! When the American farmer can put a quart of strawberries in a box that won't hold a pint of sand; when almost any coal dealer can make seventeen hundred weight a ton; when a common-looking clerk can measure a whole yard at one sweep of a thirty-two inch stick; when a ten-pound block of ice looks small alongside of a four-ounce hailstone; when any bar-keeper turns water into whiskeybefore he opens up in the morning; when you can put out a fire with illuminating oil; when soap-fat stalks abroad as A 1 clover-fed butter; when you find a miraculous draught of fishes in the sky-blue milk; when a committee of women at the church-fair can make a barrel of soup with one lone oyster; when—do we believe in miracles, doubting Alonzo! It is an age of miracles. The world is full of miracles.

Many glass factories throughout the country will be closed during July and August. The heat in the neighborhood of the furnaces is so intense during the warm days that the men cannot stand it, and after working for a little while are compelled to go out into the open air and remain there for some time. The result is that quantities of melted glass, ready for the molds, are left in the pots late in the day and become cool at night. The whole day's work is wasted. Moreover, it is almost impossible to induce good men to work in the summer. They earn good wages throughout the remainder of the year, and can afford to rest during the heated term.

A man who had been carried to a Philadelphia hospital while suffering from the effects of a severe contusion was asked if he had been treated kindly while there. "Considering all things," he answered, "I think I have no right to complain. They amputated both of my feet, removed my collar-bone, cut off my right arm, trepanned me, took out a piece of the under jaw, sawed my left hip-bone in two, and were about to excavate five or six ribs when a fire broke out in the establishment and the police got away with the rest of my body in safety."—Brooklyn Eagle.

We ran across a man the other day who was traveling for pleasure. 'But,' said we, 'you do not seem to be having such a hilarious time.' 'No, certainly not. I am not traveling for my own pleasure, I am traveling for the pleasure of my wife.' 'Oh, so your wife is with you, is she?' 'No, sir; she is in New York.'—Laramie Boomerang.

Greely, in Colorado, a town of 3,000 people contains no liquor shops. It uses and needs no police force, and in two years and a half seven dollars only was called out of the poor-fund. Bavaria, Ill., a town of the same population, with absolute prohibition, was without a drunkard, without a pauper and without a crime.

THE SOAP QUESTION.

It would seem to be the prevailing notion that cheap or common soap was amply sufficient for all laundry and household work by the endless variety of low-priced washing compounds now produced—demanded by many grocers and those who practice such a false economy as to use inferior goods of this nature—giving the grocer every opportunity to recommend that which pays them a better profit than old reliable standard brands will warrant.

Grocers can know but little of the quality of soap they sell, so perfectly can pure goods be imitated in appearance, and when composed of a fat obtained from diseased animals, dying from epidemic and other causes, they convey into the household all the taint and poison of disease, which must necessarily infect the skin and clothes, and make such productions dangerous to use.

Common soap has no basis for merit—lacking in body, it quickly wastes away, leaving nothing but the strong alkalies and mineral substances which compose cheap soap, as the only washing quality of such goods, which at once naturally rots and destroys the texture and usefulness of fabric.

It is an actual fact no ordinary family will use more than ten dollars' worth of a first-class soap in a year; and, while the difference saved to them by buying a common soap would hardly be three dollars, they lose in wear and tear of dry goods more than ten times this difference. Thinking as a majority do that fabrics are getting more and more inferior as to quality of manufacture, they will find that they have deceived themselves by using soaps, or so-called washing powders, simply because of their less price or extra strength, which they imagine does the washing quicker or easier, and not apprehending the fact that the more neutral the soap the more economical and better the washing quality for practical economy. In connection with the above facts, we would call attention to an advertisement in another column, of the noted soap makers, CURTIS, DAVIS & CO., who have had a practical experience of nearly fifty years as manufacturers of our best and most reliable goods, which they offer at nearly the same price as inferior goods, and a trial of which will be a sufficient recommendation of their superiority over common grades of soap.

Parents who allow their children to grow up with scrofulous humors bursting from every pore, are guilty of a great wrong. Think of them pointed out as branded with a loathsome disease, and you will readily procure them the Cuticura Remedies. j

BY UNIVERSAL ACCORD

Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the best of all purgatives for family use. They are the product of long, laborious, and successful chemical investigation, and their extensive use, by physicians in practice, and by all civilized nations, proves them the best and most effectual purgative pill that science can devise. Being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use, and being sugar coated they are pleasant to take. In intrinsic value and curative powers no other pills can be compared with them; and every person, knowing their virtues, will employ them, when needed. They keep the system in perfect order, and maintain in healthy action the whole machinery of life. Mild, searching and effectual, they are especially adapted to the needs of the digestive apparatus, derangements of which they prevent and cure, if timely taken. They are the best and safest physic to employ for children and weakened constitutions, where a mild but effectual cathartic is required.

PIANO CHAIR.

TEACHERS, SCHOLARS and FINISHED AMATEUR AND PROFESSIONAL PLAYERS WILL ALIKE WELCOME IT.

The practice of sitting at a piano or organ practising for hours together, without a support for the back, is tiresome in the extreme, as every player knows; and, giving way to the tired feeling, very many, especially young persons, attempt to rest or relieve themselves by assuming a position which is not only ungraceful, but unnatural and unhealthy, and are often permanently injured thereby. To rest the back, it is not always necessary to incline the body to the rear. The body may lean forward, but if there is something against which the back may be pressed, it affords a sense of support, a feeling of ease which can be obtained in no other way, and really forms a true rest. The ordinary piano stool is not a comfortable seat under any circumstances, yet no material improvement was made upon the original design until this Back Piano Chair was invented. Although this Chair has been before the public but a short time, it has already attracted marked attention, and has gained the highest approval of all who have tested it. We are confident that it will fully meet the needs of thousands who have long been hoping and anxiously looking for some such improvement.

SAD ACCIDENT.

MR. OSCAR CRAIG Blown up by a Premature Blast in the Rosendale Cement Quarry—DESTRUCTION of an EYE—Its Subsequent removal by Surgical Operation.

Mr. Oscar Craig was foreman in a cement quarry at Rosendale, Ulster Co., N. Y. By an explosion one day in the quarry he lost an eye—lost it totally. Under the impression that the matter was less serious the local physician told Mr. Craig that his eye was not lost wholly, but could be saved by treatment. The experiment was tried and failed. Worse remained behi , for he was in danger of losing the other also, through sympathetic inflammation. In this strait he consulted DR. DAVID KENNEDY, of Rondout, N. Y., who told him the injured eye must be taken out to save the other. To this Mr. Craig demurred, and went back home in doubt. His local physician said: "Go to New York." To New York the patient went, and one of the most eminent oculists in the country, having looked at the case, said: "You have lost one eye entirely; go back and do what you can to save the other." Briefly, Dr. Kennedy removed the ruined eye and treated Mr. Craig with "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" to build up the system, and the result was successful.

Dr. Kennedy's success as a surgeon is due to the use of "Favorite Remedy" in the after treatment.

Are you troubled with Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Constipation or Derangement of the Kidneys and Bladder? then use Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." It will not disappoint you. Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists. 4w8

My Trundle Bed.

As I rummaged through the attic, listening to the falling rain,
As it pattered on the shingles and against the window pane—
Peeping o'er the chests and boxes, which with dust were thickly spread,
Saw I in the farthest corner what was once my trundle bed.
So I drew it from the recess, where it had remained so long,
Hearing all the while the music of my mother's voice in song,
As she sang in sweetest accents what I since have often read—
"Hush, my dear, lie still and slumber, holy angels guard thy bed."

As I listened, recollections that I thought had been forgot,
Came with all the gush of memory rushing, thronging to the spot;
And I wandered back to childhood, to those merry days of yore,
When I knelt beside my mother, by this bed upon the floor.
Then it was, with hands so gently placed upon my infant head,
That she taught my lips to utter carefully the words she said.
Never have they been forgotten, deep are they in memory riven:
"Hallowed be thy name, oh! Father—Father, thou who art in Heaven."

This she taught me, then she told me of its import great and deep,
After which I learned to utter, "Now I lay me down to sleep."
Then it was, with hands uplifted and in accents soft and mild,
That my mother asked our Father—"Father, do Thou bless my child."
Years have passed, and that dear mother long has mouldered 'neath the sod,
And I trust her sainted spirit revels in the home of God;
But that scene at summer twilight never has from memory fled,
And it comes in all its freshness when I see my trundle bed.

THE SON OF A KING.

Jack turned out of the alley in which he lived into a broad street, and shrank as the bitter blast swept around the corner and seemed to wrap him in its icy arms. He held tightly to his newspapers, as the wind seemed inclined to enter into a tussle for them, and tucked them under one arm, trying to shield his bare, frost-bitten hands under his coat.

'If I was only some big man's son, now,' he went on, keeping a sharp lookout for customers, 'I'd fix up some 'fore I went out such nights—an alderman's son, or a railroad conductor's, maybe, or a king's—yes, I'd like to be a king's son. They're fine fellows—have all the good clothes they want, and carriages and horses—cracky! if I only had a horse to ride when I go to sell papers! I'd have a pair of good mittens, anyhow! Whew! just feel that!'

He sprang for his cap, which had taken a sail into the gutter. He found beside it a scrap of old carpeting, which he carefully wrapped about one of his tingling hands. It was rather inconvenient in selling papers and making change, but purchasers were few. Night had already closed in, and no one was on the street who could remain in shelter.

Jack wandered on till he was attracted to the half-open door of the vestibule of a large building. He crept timidly in. Cheery sounds and a bright light came from the inner doors, which were open for air. A few pleasant-looking gentlemen were standing near them, and they smiled encouragingly at Jack, making room for him as he ventured forward to take a peep at what was going on inside.

What a wonder of brightness and music and strange, beautiful things! The room was crowded with happy-faced children and a few grown people. But the wonder of wonders was a tree which grew on a platform at the further end of the room. Was ever tree before seen with such fruit! Jack, in better days, had lived in the country, but all he could now dimly recall of well-laden apple, pear, peach or cherry trees, was put to shame by the glories of this. If there was one thing to make a child happy or a child comfortable which it did not bear, Jack could not have told what that thing might be. He listened to the singing, now being quite within the door, and finding the warmth of the room very grateful. It was not of the see-saw, hop-skip-and-jump style which prevails in so many Sunday schools. One of the teachers, full of love for the work, music and children, had carefully trained them, and their voices gave full expression to the words:

'Yes, we long to swell the anthem that forevermore shall ring,
From the pure in heart made perfect in the palace of the King,
Oh, the palace of the King—royal palace of the King,
Where our Father, in his mercy, all the ransomed ones will bring,' etc.

They seemed to go further into Jack's heart than anything he had heard for a long time. A young lady drew him into the seat by her side, and he watched with eager interest as the fruit of that marvelous tree was gathered.

'Do you go to Sunday school?' she asked.

'No'm. What's all these folks here for?'

'Why, these children come to Sunday school to learn about God and how to be his own little ones. We are here to-night because Christmas is the birthday of his Son Jesus Christ. You know about him, don't you?'

'No'm,—leastways I heard about him long ago, when I had a mother.'

'He is the Son of God, the King of heaven. He came down on earth to help us in all our troubles, and to take us to his Father's house if we will be his children. Listen now—' The presents being about half distributed, the other song was sung:

'We are children of a King,
Heavenly King, heavenly King.
We are children of a King,
Singing as we journey,
Jesus Christ, our guard and guide,
Bids us, nothing terrified,
Follow closely at his side,
Singing as we journey.'

'Did you say he was a King?' asked Jack, who had listened to the words as if bewildered.

'Yes.'

'And are all these his children?'

'Yes, if they will love and serve him. He will give them everything they need, and take them home to his palace one day.'

'I'd like to be one of 'em,' said Jack, wistfully.

'You can.' Her earnest eyes looked into the boys's, equally earnest. 'He wants you to be his son just as much as he wants any one.'

'Sho, now!' said Jack, with a half laugh, but meaning no disrepect, except to his own rags, which he eyed disdainfully.

'It's likely he wants such a chap as me!'

'Will you come here next Sunday at half past nine?' asked his friend, finding the giving of instruction under present circumstances rather a difficult matter.

'Yes'm, I'd like to. I must go and sell my papers now.'

'Wait a moment,' she said, her eyes falling on his hands, still holding the bit of carpet. With a little trouble she made her way around the side of the room to the neighborhood of the tree, and then back. 'Here,' she said, 'these came on the tree for you.' She drew on the poor hands a pair of mittens, blue, soft and warm.

Jack gazed with wide-open eyes. 'Did he—did the King send them to me?' he whispered in an awe-struck voice.

'Yes, he did.' And to the latest day of his life Jack believed it from his very soul.

He went out into the night, with his mind confused by all he had seen and heard. It would have seemed like a dream but for the mittens on his hands, sent by the King; he knew it must be so, for who else could have known just what he wanted? He strayed into a few places of business, but his mind was not on what he was about, and he soon found himself back at the door of the mission school. He now found the vestibule crowded, and, instead of trying to get in he turned into a little alley-way which led along side of the building, intending to climb up to one of the back windows and look in.

He could do better than this. A back porch opened into a narrow entry, from which he could get a view inside. The kind-faced man who had been foremost in urging him into the light and the music was now speaking to the children, whose upturned faces made a most pleasant sight.

They all seemed to think a great deal of that King, Jack thought, for this man was talking of how he wanted them all to be his children, and of his Son, who wanted to be their elder brother—who wanted to give them everything, and, in return, only asked that they should obey and love them.

'As if a body could help doing that!' Jack looked thoughtful and determined as he suddenly turned aad ran down the area steps. 'I want to know where that smell comes from,' he said, peering into the basement, in which was the furnace.

Was it a red, angry demon which glared out at him? With a pale face he darted round the front of the building. The back door was narrow, with little room outside. He passed roughly through the crowd at the entrance.

If he was indeed the King's son, was he not brother to all those who were in danger? He felt like shrieking his terrible warning, but put a restraint on himself which saved many a life that night. He whispered a few words to a man who stood inside the door. He laid a heavy hand with excitement on the boy's shoulder.

'Don't say a single word!'

Then his voice rang through the room in tones which commanded instant attention:

'The teachers will lead their classes out in order—PROMPTLY.'

There was a general move. The entry was cleared, and classes nearest the door quickly marshaled out. If many guessed the fearful why of all this, a spirit of self-restraint seemed to be caught by those in authority, which stood them in good stead in this dread hour. Some would have crowded too fast, some would have delayed to gather small belongings, but firm hands regulated hasty movements, and loiterers were hurried forward, some fretful, some woe begone at not being allowed a half second to secure their Christmas treasures.

Jack, clinging unnoticed to a railing of the gallery stairway, watched keenly as excitement grew on those who were furthest behind. Many went out by the back door, but he saw they had stopped that now, and still his friend of the pleasant face had not sought safety for himself. Still he was striving with firm hand and voice to prevent a panic. Suddenly a puff of smoke rose between him and the advancing children and drove him back. The furnace was under the middle of the building, and the heated floor had just there charred through.

Jack fought his way out and dashed around to the rear. He saw at once why no more had gone out that way. Tongues of flame had darted up the steps and were hissing near the doorway. Without stopping to think, with a boy's light step and active leap, crying, 'Quick quick! the window!' he was nearly at the man's side.

But he fell. He had breathed the hot breath of the flame, and knew no more of how the man, hearing the sharp cry, turned and seized him. Springing to a window, both fell with the crashing glass outside and were carried beyond danger by the firemen.

'Only one poor boy killed—what a merciful escape!' So said all.

'But it is the boy who saved all the rest.'

'To the hospital?'

'No; to my house,' said the man who had brought him out.

'It must be the 'palace of the King!'' said Jack, half dreamily, two weeks later. He had just opened his eyes for the first time, in a room whose cleanliness and comfort and brightness were magnificence to him.

'Bless your heart, no, honey,' said a cheery-looking old nurse, who jumped up at sound of his voice. 'You've been a-talkin' about it all the time, and at first we thought you was on the way there, sure; but there's so many a-prayin' for you and a-waitin' to be good to you, I guess the King thinks you'll have to wait here for a while yet.'—*N. SWEET-MINDED WOMEN.

So great is the influence of a sweet-minded woman on those around her, that it is almost boundless. It is to her that friends come in seasons of sorrow and sickness for help and comfort; one soothing touch of her kindly hand works wonders in the feverish child; a few words let fall from her lips in the ear of a sorrowing sister does much to raise the load of grief that is bowing its victim down to the dust in anguish. The husband comes home, worn out with the pressure of business, and feeling irritable with the world in general; but when he enters the cozy sitting-room, and sees the blaze of the bright fire, and meets his wife's smiling face, he succumbs in a moment to the soothing influences which act as a balm of Gilead to his wounded spirits, that are wearied with combating with the stern realities of life. The rough school-boy flies in a rage from the taunts of his companions to find solace in a mother's smile; the little one, full of grief with its own large trouble, finds a haven of rest on its mother's breast; and so one might go on with instance after instance of the influence that a sweet-minded woman has in the social life with which she is connected. Beauty is an insignificant power when compared with hers.

A CHURCH WELCOME.

We have lately moved into one of Boston's pretty suburbs, which I will call Hayfield, because from my window I see a field with five hay-ricks. Last Sunday I started out to find a church, and found a little mission chapel where were perhaps thirty or forty people assembled. After the service there I started off on my search again, as I wished to know what and where were the churches we could attend. Seeing a spire in the distance, I aimed for it, until at last I came to a pretty church, from which the congregation was just issuing. Meeting a tall, dark, and rather fine-looking gentleman walking along with his little girl, I asked him if he could tell me what church that was. He at once answered with genial courtesy that it was the S. street church. He told me that they would be glad to see me there, and would try to make me at home. They would like to have me come in to the Sunday school. He went on to tell me about the minister, the work he had been doing and hoped to do. Would I like an introduction to Mr. D.? He would look out for me that evening if I was there, and make me acquainted with the minister. He went on to give me a list of the services, and the time of each. All of this in an easy, genial way, which put me entirely at ease, and made me form a favorable impression of the church which had in it such an atmosphere of welcome as breathed in this member's words.

I came home, and had not taken off my wraps, when there was a ring at the door-bell. I answered it to find a young lady who had called to inquire if the new neighbors were church attendants. If so we would be very welcome to the S. church. Of course I invited her in, and we had a friendly chat. It was the same thing over. Would we like to have the minister call upon us? We would be sure to like him. She would mention us to him. We had a hearty welcome, a cordial invitation.

We went to church that night. We were shown good seats. We had good singing, and listened to an earnest sermon from a man whose face reminded me of a fine portrait of George MacDonald, which I saw once in the Eclectic. Then there was an after meeting, to which we stayed. A young lady, who saw us without hymn books, came across the aisle and gave us her own. I saw afterward that she was without one.

Next day we had a pleasant social call from the minister, in which we grew friendly and acquainted. We were told about a literary society about to be formed. We were not pressed nor urged to anything, but simply made very welcome. He had seen us in church last evening. Then it turned out that I was the one that Mr. M. had spoken to him about meeting; and then that Miss R. had told him about us.

'Do you see your congregation when preaching?' I asked.

He answered that he looked over the church before the service and during the singing. If there were any strangers he fixed them in his mind and endeavored to see them. He meant that strangers should not come to his church many times without his becoming acquainted with them. We have decided to attend that church.—Christian Weekly.

HOW TO KEEP FROM DROWNING.

The human body weighs a pound in the water, and a single chair will support two grown persons; that is, it willkeep the head above water, which is all that is necessary when it is a question of life or death. One finger placed upon a stool or chair, or a small box or piece of board, will easily keep the head above water, while the two feet and other hand may be used as paddles to propel the body toward the shore. It is not at all necessary to know how to swim to keep from drowning in this way. A little experience of the buoyant power of the water, and faith in it, is all that is required. We have seen a small boy, who could not swim a stroke, propel himself back and forth across a deep, wide pond by means of a board that would not sustain five pounds weight. Children and all others should have practice in the sustaining power of water. In nine cases out of ten the knowledge that what will sustain a pound weight is all that is necessary to keep one's head above water will serve better emergencies than the greatest expertness as a swimmer. A person unfamiliar with the buoyant power of the water will naturally try to climb to the top of the floating object on which he tries to save himself. If it is large enough that is all right. But it is generally not large enough, and half of a struggling group is often drowned in the desperate scramble of a life and death struggle to climb on top of a piece of wreck or other floating object, not large enough to keep them all entirely above water. This often happens when pleasure boats capsize. All immediately want to get out of the water on top of the over-turned or half-filled boat, and are all drowned except those whom the wrecked craft will wholly bear up. If they would simply trust the water to sustain ninety-nine hundredths of the weight of their bodies, and the disabled boat the other hundredth, they might be saved under most circumstances. An overturned or water-filled wooden boat will sustain more people in this way than it will carry. It would keep the heads above water of as many people as could get their hands on the gunwale. These are simple facts, easily learned, and may some day save your life.

A young lady having 'set her cap' for a rather large specimen of the opposite sex, and, having failed to win him, was telling her sorrows to a couple of her confidants, when one of them comforted her with these words: 'Never mind, Mollie; there are as good fish in the sea as ever were caught.' 'Mollie knows that,' replied her little brother, 'but she wants a whale.'

A Philadelphia girl was so thoughtless as to tell a friend at her wedding the names of the donors would not be displayed with the presents. Of course the friend told. Her wedding came off the other day, and the presents were not displayed either. They consisted of 732 plated sugar spoons and 1380 salt cellars. —Philadelphia News.

Sympathy.

A knight and a lady once met in a grove,
While each was in quest of a fugitive love.
A river ran mournfully murmuring by,
And they wept in its waters for sympathy.

"Oh, never was a knight such a sorrow bore!"
"Oh, never was a maid so deserted before!"
"From life and its woes let us instantly fly,
And jump in together for company."

They searched for an eddy that suited the deed—
But here was a bramble and there was a weed;
"How tiresome it is!" said the fair, with a sigh;
So they sat down to rest in company.

They gazed at each other, the maid and the knight,
How fair was her form and how goodly his hight;
"One mournful embrace," sobbed the youth, "ere we die!"
So kissing and crying kept company.

"O, had I but loved such an angel as you!"
"O, had but my swain been a quarter as true!"
"To miss such perfection how blinded was I!"
Sure now they were excellent company.

At length spoke the lass, 'twixt a smile and a tear,
"The weather is cold for a watery bier;
When summer returns we may easily die—
Till then let us sorrow in company."
—Bishop Heber.

THE MEASURE OF HER LOVE.

'Myrtle, dear?'

'Yes, George, what is it?' replied the girl, glancing shyly upward.

The radiant glory of a summer moon shone down upon the earth this June night, bathing in all its mellow splendor the leafy branches of the sturdy old oaks that had for centuries shaded the entrance to Castle McMurtry and laughed defiance to the fierce gales that every winter came howling down in all their cruel force and fury from the moorlands lying to the westward of the castle. On the edge of the broad demesne that stretched away to the south stood a large brindle cow, and as the moonlight flecked with silvery luster her starboard ribs she seemed to Myrtle a perfect picture of sweet content and almost holy calm.

'Is it not a beautiful night, dearest?' murmured the girl. 'See how the moonbeams flutter down through the trees, making strange lights and shadows that flit among the shrubs and flowers in such a weird, ghost-like fashion. The dell is indeed clothed with loveliness to-night, sweetheart.'

'Yes,' said George W. Simpson, 'this is the boss dell;' and then looking down into the pure, innocent face that was lifted to his, he took in his own broad third-base palm the little hand that erstwhile held up Myrtle's polonaise. As they stood there silently in the bosky glade George passed his arm silently but firmly around Myrtle's waist.

The noble girl did not shy.

'Do you love me, sweetheart?' he asked in accents that were tremulous with tremulousness.

Myrtle's head was drooping now, and the rosy blushes of Calumet avenue innocence were chasing each other across her peachy cheeks.

George drew her more closely to him. If a mosquito had tried to pass between them then it would have been bad—for the mosquito.

'Can you doubt me, darling?' he whispered. 'You surely must know that I love you with a wild, passionate, whoa-Emma love that can never die. Do you not love me a little in return?'

For an instant the girl did not speak. George heard the whisking of the brindle cow's tail break in rudely upon the solemn stillness of the night, and ever and anon came the dull thud of the bullfrog as he jumped into a neighboring pond. Presently Myrtle placed her arms about his neck, and, with a wistful, baby's-got-the-cramp look in her sweet face, she said to him: 'I love you, George, with a deathless devotion that will eventually keep you broke.' And with these fateful words she adjusted her rumpled bang and fearlessly led the way to an ice-cream lair.—Chicago Tribune.

SHERMAN AS A KISSER.

Generals Sherman, Sheridan and Pope attended the Grand Historical Encampment at St. Louis during the reunion of the Army of the Tennessee, and gallant 'Tecumseh,' writes a correspondent of the Kansas City Times, enjoyed himself amazingly. He admires the young ladies and makes no secret of it, and he patted the belles under the chin, and when he saw one more than usually handsome he would place one hand on her head, the other beneath her chin, and plant a luscious kiss upon her fair cheeks. Many of the young fellows envied the old veteran. He said he had a perfect right to kiss them, as he had dandled the majority of them upon his knees. And it must be confessed that the ladies rather liked it, for one, a bride of a few months, artlessly raised her other cheek for the general to kiss after he had saluted her on the one. Sherman is an expert in the art of osculation and kisses with a vim and virility surprising. General Sheridan descanted on the beauty of the young ladies, and he awarded the palm to Miss Ada Ames, who personated the Lady of the Lake in the Round Table tent. He said she was the most accomplished, handsome, beautiful young lady he had ever seen—no mean compliment from a man who is admittedly a connoisseur of feminine beauty. It was amusing to see how the ladies pestered the general to buy some bric-a-brac they offered for sale. Sherman, however was obdurate and would not purchase from any who asked him. If he noticed a young lady in a tent who seemed afraid to approach him, he would walk up to her and if she had anything to sell would pull a dollar out of his pocket and purchase the trifle involuntarily. Mrs. Joe Can made strenuous efforts to induce Tecumseh to purchase something of her tent, but the old general was obstinate. All her charms availed naught, and he persisted in refusing. Sherman remained for two hours in the armory, and the lowest calculation is that he kissed seventy of the young ladies, and about twenty of them twice, and five of them three times. The belles will not forget Sherman's visit in a hurry.

That was a wise little theologian on the Pacific Coast, who voiced the bitter cry of humanity in her evening prayer the other night. After the 'Now I lay me down to sleep,' she added the petition, in most fervent tone, 'And now, O God, if you can, please catch the devil and kill him.'

WEDDING ANNIVERSARIES.

A WOMAN'S THOUGHTS OF LONG AGO.

Do you always feel sentimental when the anniversary of your wedding day comes around? If so, you can sympathize with me. This day—well, never mind how many years ago, I put my hand in dear Pat's and swore to love, honor and obey him till death us do part. Of course now, every woman remembers just how everything went off on that memorable day; but do you know it seems to me that none could remember it as vividly as I do.

I feel just as if I was a girl again. I am filled with the same hopes, the same joy, the same anxiety to 'have it all over.' I am again standing in my own little room—the little room I told you all about not long ago—am putting the finishing touches to my toilet. I am touching myself almost reverently, for I am remembering how soon I will no longer belong to myself. I am feeling for the first time, not how goodly a possession I am to myself, but how funny it will be to belong to anyone else! I am looking more anxiously than I ever looked before at the face that looks back at me from the mirror, and I am wondering if Pat will always think me as pretty as he vows he does now. Then I am kneeling down beside my bed asking God to bless my marriage and to bless my dear parents, and then I am sobbing as if my heart would break and remembering all the loving things those dear parents have done for me and how little I have deserved them all! Again I am hastening down stairs to meet my lover, and ask him if he doesn't feel 'shaky,' to which question he answers emphatically, 'You bet!'

Then he and I stand before the minister of God and plight our troth. For better or for worse, till death us do part!—ah, you young people, study the marriage ceremony better—think of what you promise—be careful you do not forswear yourselves before God!

I can feel Pat's hand tremble when he takes mine—he says now it was the fear of not being able to make me happy that caused it—dear old fellow!

It is all over now, the good man's "God bless you!' has been said, my father and mother fold me close to their loving hearts and my sisters and brothers kiss and hug me shyly—they think me different already—just because of the solemn words that have been said over me, and I am different. I feel a calm and holy confidence steal over my before rather unrestful feelings. My heart goes out to my husband—it goes out now just the same.

It was a sweet yet sad moment, and oh! my friends, although I am blessed in every way, I cannot help missing that sweet home, and I long sometimes to be a girl once more, so I could—well, so I could give myself to Pat again, I suppose. There, perhaps I am too old to be sentimental, but then I cannot help it, and after all, it's not so very wrong is it?

MISTAKES OF LIFE.

Somebody has condensed the mistakes of life and arrived at the conclusion that there are fourteen of them. Most people would say, if they told the truth, that there was no limit to the mistakes of life; that they were like the drops in the ocean or the sands of the shore in number, but it is well to be accurate. Here, then, are fourteen great mistakes: "It is a great mistake to set up our own standard of right and wrong and judge people accordingly; to measure the enjoyment of others by our own; to expect uniformity of opinion in this world; to look for judgment and experience in youth; to endeavor to mould all dispositions alike; not to yield to immaterial trifles; to look for perfection in our own actions; to worry ourselves and others with what cannot be remedied; not to alleviate all that needs alleviation as far as lies in our power; not to make allowance for the infirmities of others; to consider everything impossible that we cannot perform; to believe only what our finite minds can grasp; to expect to be able to understand everything." The greatest of mistakes is to live only for time, when any moment may launch us into eternity.

The Rev. Mr. Dodd relates that once when riding on the circuit, he breakfasted at a house where johnny cakes were served. Observing a feather protruding from his cake, he remarked: 'Sister, your johnny cake seems to be feathering out.' 'Yes,' responded the lady unabashed; 'I told John no longer ago than yesterday that he must get a cover for the meal barrel or else move the henroost.'

Two of the brokers were watching a lady who was sitting in the gallery yesterday, and wondering who she was, when they noticed another broker walk up and speak to her. 'Now I know who she is,' said one of the brokers; 'She's Jack's wife.' 'How do you know?' 'Because he neither took off his hat nor shook hands when he spoke to her.' That settled it.—Oil City Derrick.

"Get hold of your boy's heart," is the advice given by a spinster philanthropist who discourses on the management of children. Our neighbor's wife sniffs contemptuously at the counsel, and says she finds it better to get hold of the boy's collar or the seat of his pants when it becomes necessary to reason with him.

Never tell a secret to a young man, because "new pails leak;" never tell it to an old man, because "an old door seldom shuts tight." There is only one better rule, and that is never to do anything which needs to be kept in secret.

'Do you believe in a future life in which we shall renew the ties that bind us together here?' 'I do,' said the henpecked husband sadly, 'but I don't want to.'

'I tell you, gentlemen, that dog o' mine is an intelligent critter.' 'Possibly,' muttered Fogg; 'but you wouldn't think it judging from the company he keeps.'

Judge Robinson was taken quite sick Tuesday night, and for some time was unconscious, but is now much improved, and will be out as usual in a day or two. The trouble is supposed to have been caused by his getting overheated, as he was out in the hot sun all the afternoon, and became quite warm.

The managers of the Boston and Albany road are making a commendable effort to put a stop to the defacing of rocks, fences, etc., along their line with advertisements. Farmers and others who permit their buildings and fences to be disfigured in the same manner would receive the blessing of all passers-by if they would follow the good example.

Persons who are connected with the telephone exchange will do well to keep an eye on their instruments during thunder storms this summer. A life of Longfellow has just been issued from the press of J. R. Osgood & Co., prepared by Francis H. Underwood, for many years an editor of the Atlantic Monthly. It was begun, the author says, somewhat more than a year ago, at the suggestion of the poet, the story of whose life it tells in an entertaining way. It has a steel engraving of the poet and several other pictures, including his birthplace and his late residence. An interesting feature of the work is the details given of the circumstances that suggested many of his poems, and the admirers of Mr. Longfellow will find much pleasure in perusing the volume, for which R. L. Hathaway is taking orders in this town, Monson and vicinity.

A meeting of the executive committee of the improvement association was held at the house of Dr. Holbrook, the president, on Tuesday evening, and it was voted to expend $100 on sidewalks. The committee on sidewalks was instructed to re-cover the Main street cross-walk in front of Commercial Block, and to lay new concrete cross-walks as follows: one across Main street, from the corner of Central, to connect with the depot walk; two from Mr. Lawrence's corner across Church street, one to the bridge, the other towards the bank; and one across Pleasant street, from the corner of Wales Hall Block. If the money holds out, they will also put in another one across Pleasant street, at the south corner of Church, one across Park street at the north corner of Central, and also recover the cross-walk at the south end of the Main street bridge. These are improvements which must be appreciated by all, especially in muddy weather. The committee also voted that the president confer with the selectmen in regard to the care of the cemetery.

The commissioners had a hearing on the 'Burleigh road' last week, without coming to any decision, and the hearing will be resumed at the court house in Springfield on the 27th.

Mr. Editor:—I did not attend Barnum's circus in Springfield, consequently did not see 'Jumbo.' I preferred to attend the hearing before the county commissioners the day following in our town. It was a big affair for Hampden. I had never seen a board of county commissioners, and concluded it would be quite a 'Jumbo' to see them, but found them to be only men after all. There was quite an excitement among the citizens about the so-called Burleigh road. The road had been previously laid by two or three boards of selectmen, and once ordered by a former board of commissioners. The hearing was in Academy hall, filling it to its utmost capacity. All seemed to desire to testify and also to argue the case. One joiner attempted to enlighten the board, but was cut short, being called to order by the chairman for profanity. Dea. Lee drew a contrast between the civil law and the moral, and thought the commissioners would do an immoral act if they laid the road. One of the officials of the town, who had once laid the road, thought, on the whole, seven-eighths of the inhabitants were opposed to the road. R. H. Chaffee, who opposed the road, held the balance of power, and knew for certain that Daniel Flynn owned his farm and it was not mortgaged. This might be news to the commissioners, but was not to the citizens generally. I was much pleased with the remarks of 'Consanguinity.' He made a lofty ascent, soared with the eagle in the heavens, but, as a result, found it hard getting back to earth. A young man from Holyoke appeared for the remonstrants, and talked large and long. If the commissioners do or do not lay the road, I will inform you. I have been a reader of the JOURNAL for a long time, but I see no local news from Hampden lately. What has become of your correspondent? I wish to know what is going on at the hub, and if I do not get it from the JOURNAL I lose the news. I understand the local ministers take their texts on the Sabbath from the observations in the streets, and presume those who attend church next Sabbath will know something of the new road's prospect. JUMBO, JR.

The dwelling house of James Pendergast, on the East Hill, was burned on Tuesday morning, at 2 o'clock, and Mr. Pendergast's mother perished in it. The house was insured for $1000.

The Methodist preachers of this district organized the Springfield District Ministerial Association at a meeting in Springfield on Wednesday, with Rev. Frederic Woods of Springfield as president, Rev. E. S. Best of Monson being a member of the executive committee. "H. M. S. Pinafore" seems to be all the rage at present. Rehearsals for the opera are being held every evening in Central Hall, under the direction of Prof. A. G. He is considered a very fine trainer, and he carries a full line of costumes and scenery that far surpasses any other company, and introduces quite a number of new features in the opera. Date of performance not yet given.

John Feehan, while handling coal at the depot, Wednesday, found a torpedo, such as is used in signaling trains, but not knowing what it was proceeded to investigate, when an explosion occurred, which fortunately did no more damage than to slightly scorch his hands.

The annual meeting of the Brookfield Associational Conference was held in the chapel at Ware on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, and was very largely attended. Hon. Lewis N. Gilbert was chosen president, and Rev. W. D. Brown of Gilbertville was re-elected scribe. Rev. J. Danielson of Southbridge opened the discussion on "the training and development of young converts with reference to their usefulness," by stating that every age has had its special name, arising from some peculiarity, but this was pre-eminently a practical age. The trouble among churches is that the work is left to a few. What the churches need is to appoint young converts as teachers in the Sunday school, and make them useful in the social meetings, and, more than all, set before them the right example. Rev. Mr. Stebbins of Brookfield said he believed in getting the little ones into the church before they were competent to fill positions of trust and responsibility. Rev. M. L. Richardson argued that the "failures of churches and the ministry to reach all classes" arose from a habit of magnifying numbers, wealth, learning and culture, above purity of heart and life. Men will fight, dispute and die for religion, but are not willing to live for it. A pure, live church will spontaneously draw the unconverted to Christ. William E. Lewis was called upon and said the failure to reach all classes arose from the fact that they were not treated as classes. He thought we should send the student after the student, the merchant or mechanic after the merchant or mechanic, and the boys after the boys. Rev. J. F. Gaylord of Barre stated "that the most efficient organization for the promotion of temperance" was the church, because it was free from all entanglements of political and secret organizations, comprehensive in its designs, efficient in its means, and permanent in its demands. Rev. Dr. Barrows delivered an able address on "National Home Missions." He said the United States was being filled with the best blood in the world, and American success means the handling of the world. Never were there such opportunities and responsibilities in Christian work as now. In reference to Sunday schools, it was stated that at New Braintree, out of a possible 100 Sunday school scholars, there were 92 enrolled. Rev. S. P. Wilder of North Brookfield read a fine essay upon "What ought a pastor and people to expect of each other?" The Conference adjourned on Wednesday afternoon, to meet at Brimfield next October.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

IS THE

STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE

Facts, say the professors, are obtained by the concurrent opinion of the largest number of best able to judge. This principle applies to the Steinway pianos, as the largest number of people pronounce them to be the best, and the firm is doing the largest volume of business of any piano-making concern in the world. Purchasers, by paying $75, $100, $150, $200 or $300 more, according to the style, for them than for any other pianos; dealers, by comparing every other piano with them; makers, by putting their pianos below them in price, and then claiming that they are pretty nearly as good, because they "have some of Steinway's workmen," or "foreman from Steinway's," or "use Steinway's scales," etc., all proclaim that

THE STEINWAY

IS THE ACKNOWEDGED STANDARD PIANO,

Not only in this country, but also in Europe it stands as far ahead of all other pianos as it does in America.

This fact deing established that the Steinway is the best, of course the next best is that which is nearest like it, which purchasers can decide for themselves by listening and comparing with the standard.

First Time at Church.

A grave, sweet wonder in the baby face,
And look of mingled dignity and grace,
Such as a painter's hand might love to trace.

A pair of trusting, innocent blue eyes,
That higher than the stained-glass windows rise,
Into the fair and cloudless summer skies.

The people round him sing, "Above the sky
There's rest for little children when they die"—
To him—thus gazing up—the rest seems nigh.

The organ peals; he must not look around,
Although with wonderment his pulses bound—
The place whereon he stands is holy ground.

The sermon over, and the blessing said,
He bows—as "mother does"—his golden head,
And thinks of little brother, who is dead.

He knows that now he dwells above the sky,
Where holy children enter when they die;
And prays God take him there too, by and by.

Pet, may he keep you in the faith alway,
And bring you to that home for which you pray,
Where all shall have their child-hearts back one day!

A LOVE STORY FROM ENGLAND.

The marriage of a young couple in Hyde Park Saturday night was the happy realization of a very interesting and pretty romance. They are both children of farmers in England, he of poor, she of wealthy parents. The farms adjoin. They became infatuated with each other and a courtship began. The parents of the young bride were bitterly opposed to the match, and did everything to break it up. Love for parents, however, could not repress the flame that burned for her lover. The tie grew stronger. Even threats of disinheriting her availed nothing. As a last resort she was sent to Scotland. Her lover was almost broken-hearted. She was closely watched lest she might write to him. Not a word came to console him, and, despairing of ever seeing his love again, he sailed for America. This was ten months ago. After his departure the girl was brought to her home in England. The hope she had fostered of meeting her lover was usurped by bitter grief and disappointment. Some time after the arrival of the young man in this country he wrote to a former governess of the young lady regarding her. Through the governess she learned where her lover was. Without preparation, and with the bare means of defraying the trip, she set sail and arrived in New York last week, almost penniless and without a friend in the great city. Thursday her lover received a letter from that city stating that she had followed him to the shores of the free. Money was sent her and the noble and plucky woman came to Scranton on the six o'clock train Saturday night. The couple were married by a Hyde Park minister the same evening.—*Scranton (Pa.) To Remove Wrinkles.—To one fluid ounce of tincture of gum benzine add seven ounces distilled glycerine. Bathe face, neck and hands with it at night, letting it dry on. Wash off in the morning with a very little pure white castile soap and soft water. If the water is hard add a little dissolved borax. This is a famous cosmetic, and has been sold under various names. It is an excellent remedy for tan, sunburn and freckles.

A scene in the streets of London, described by a French observer: A drunken policeman has been picked up by a workman, who is doing his best to keep him from toppling over into the gutter. At last, finding his efforts useless, he waxes indignant and exclaims: "For shame! Hold yourself up, my boy, and let people think you are taking me home." They respect authority in London.

Whatever else a man may become, if he does not take alcohol he will never become a drunkard. He will never know the ragings of that fierce thirst which 'can not be quenched,' or that terrible delirium which peoples the chamber with loathsome and hideous forms of colored demons.

The United States Dispensatory says: 'As an article of daily use, alcoholic liquors produce the most deplorable consequences. Besides the moral degradation which they cause, habitual use gives rise to dyspepsia, dropsy, paralysis, and not unfrequently mania.'

A process for solidifying wine has been invented in Italy. From a small quantity of this extract a bottle of good wine is produced. A chemist in Marseilles has also solidified brandy, which then looks like alum and loses its odor.

As every lord giveth a certain livery to his servants, charity is the very livery of Christ. Our Saviour, who is the Lord above all lords, would have His servants known by their badge, which is love.—Bishop Latimer.

Lost, somewhere between sunrise and sunset, two golden hours, each set with sixty diamond minutes. No reward is offered, because they are gone forever.—Horace Mann.

CUTICURA,

Mr. Albert Kingsbury, Keene, N. H., troubled with bad humor on hands and neck, caused by lead poisoning. (He's a painter.) At times it would break out, crack open, and the skin separate from the flesh in large pieces, suffering great continual itching and stinging. My arms, breast and head were covered for three years, which nothing relieved or cured until I used the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) internally, and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap externally.

Is a scientific combination of some of the most powerful restorative agents in the vegetable kingdom. It restores gray hair to its original color. It makes the scalp white and clean. It cures dandruff and humors, and falling out of the hair. It furnishes the nutritive principle by which the hair is nourished and supported. It makes the hair moist, soft and glossy, and is unsurpassed as a hair dressing. It is the most economical preparation ever offered to the public, as its effects remain a long time, making only an occasional application necessary. It is recomended and used by eminent medical men, and officially endorsed by the State Assayer of Massachusetts. The popularity of Hall's Hair Renewer has increased with the test of many years, both in this country and in foreign lands, and it is now known and used in all the civilized countries of the world.

PIANO CHAIR.

TEACHERS, SCHOLARS and FINISHED AMATEUR AND PROFESSIONAL PLAYERS WILL ALIKE WELCOME IT.

The practice of sitting at a piano or organ practising for hours together, without a support for the back, is tiresome in the extreme, as every player knows; and, giving way to the tired feeling, very many, especially young persons, attempt to rest or relieve themselves by assuming a position which is not only ungraceful, but unnatural and unhealthy, and are often permanently injured thereby. To rest the back, it is not always necessary to incline the body to the rear. The body may lean forward, but if there is something against which the back may be pressed, it affords a sense of support, a feeling of ease which can be obtained in no other way, and really forms a true rest. The ordinary piano stool is not a comfortable seat under any circumstances, yet no material improvement was made upon the original design until this Back Piano Chair was invented. Although this Chair has been before the public but a short time, it has already attracted marked attention, and has gained the highest approval of all who have tested it. We are confident that it will fully meet the needs of thousands who have long been hoping and anxiously looking for some such improvement.

Price, plain, $5.00; plush, $6.00;
With adjustable back, $1.00 extra.

FOUNDED BY GORDON M. FISK.

MR. WM. WESTFALL,

OF DUCHESS CO., N. Y., 80 YEARS OF AGE, SUFFERED CONTINUALLY FOR MANY YEARS FROM STONE in the BLADDER.

Great age and painful disease are a sad combination. Yet Mr. William Westfall, formerly of Rock City, Duchess Co., N. Y., now of Washington Hollow, in the same county, came to the office of Dr. David Kennedy, the eminent physician and surgeon of Rondout, N. Y., some time since, in a condition to excite the sympathy of the most cold-blooded and hard-hearted person in the word. We say he came—he was, rather, carried to the Doctor's office, for he was totally helpless, and bore the weight of 80 years besides. He had suffered long from Retention of Urine, and had all the symptoms of an aggravated case of calculus formations in the bladder. The usual instrumental examination revealed the presence in the bladder of a urinary calculus of uncommon size. Dr. Kennedy frankly told Mr. Westfall that, owing to his age and debility, an operation was out of the question, but that he could, by the prescription of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," together with local treatment, make him comfortable and leave him to live out all his days. The outcome of this was that the patient enjoys good health to this day.

THE REASONS WHY

Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is being extensively used by our people are as follows: It is a combination of vegetable alteratives. It is pleasant to the taste, adapted to both sexes and all ages, is effective in affording immediate relief in all cases of Kidney Troubles, Liver Complaints, Constipation of the Bowels and derangements peculiar to women. At the same time it purifies the blood, thus giving tone and strength to the system debilitated by disease or age. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists. 4w13

A Summer Song.

O, de sun wucks haad in de summah time—
O climb, vine, climb! an' grow, grass, grow!—
An' de faamah toils, w'en de sun do shine,
Wid de plow, de rake an' de hoe.
But de birds sing sweet,
An' de lambs da bleat,
An' de cows in de paschur low;
An' de faamah t'inks,
Ez he stops an' drinks,
Ob de time w'en de snow will blow;
An' de faamah sees,
An' heahs, in de trees—
On de hill—in de meadow low—
Roun' de faam-house bright—
In de waam sunlight—
T'ings dat nun but de faamahs know.

De hen-hawk circles in de sky,
An' chickens hide dair heads;
De crow passes de cawn-fiel' by,
Case he de scar'-crow dreads;
De robins watch de cherry-trees,
An' wish de fruit war ripe;
De hoppergrass jumps wid de breeze,
De tree-toad tunes his pipe;
De peacock, on de baan-yaad fence,

De ducks an' geese, wid little sense,

AN INCIDENT OF THE WAR.

'Do you see that young lady in white talking with Clarke?'

The speaker was a tall, distinguished looking man of thirty-five, in the uniform of a cavalry company in the Confederate service. The time was a summer night in 1863; the place, the hotel parlor in a small village in Middle Tennesee. The occasion was a hop given in honor of the presence of a detachment of 'Forrest Cavalry,' the daring riders whose names are household words in Southern homes, from the mountains of Tennesee to the valleys of the Mississippi. The young lady referred to was a pretty, graceful girl, with dark gray eyes, waving hair of a dark reddish gold, and the exquisite complexion that accompanies it.

'Who is she?' asked the Colonel's companion.

'That is Picton's sweetheart, Miss Garnett.'

'Not the same that saved his life after Shiloh?' said Captain Barclay.

'The same,' rejoined Colonel Terry. 'She is a little creature to do such a thing, but she did. You see she was in the neighborhood at the time of the battle, and somebody told her that Picton was killed. She went over the field and found him badly wounded through the lungs, but still alive. She sent a boy that she had brought with her to hunt up a surgeon, and she stayed by Picton. The boy found Dr. Cowan, and when they had got back Miss Garnet had raised Picton up, with his head upon her breast, so that he could breathe more easily. Dr. Cowan examined the wound without moving him, and told her he was afraid it was hopeless, for the least motion, even laying him down again, might produce a fatal hemorrhage. If he could be kept perfectly quiet until morning, and the bleeding checked through the night, he might have a bare chance of pulling through.

"'Well,' said the brave little woman, 'he shall be kept quiet, for I will stay just here, and not let him move.' And, by George, she did; she never stirred all night, and in the morning they carried him to the nearest house, and she nursed him until he was out of danger.'

'That's a sweetheart worth having,' said Captain Barclay, with a glance of admiration at the subject of their conversation.

Half an hour later Colonel Terry was at Miss Garnett's side, receiving a warm greeting that told that the two were fast friends.

'Tell me of all my friends in the old battalion,' she said presently.

'How many?' he asked quizzically; 'more than one?'

'I mean what I said,' she answered, with a merry laugh and a quick, bright blush. 'I have heard from 'one' of them very recently.'

'Does Charley know you are here?' asked the Colonel.

'No; it is not a week since I left Memphis. Will they join you here!'

'They!' he replied, inquiringly.

'The rest of the command, I mean,' she replied, blushing again.

'A portion of it may, but for that part you are particularly interested in I cannot say. You know they are with the old General, and their movements can't be counted on with any degree of certainty.'

'They are the comets of the service,' said Miss Garnett. 'Quite as erratic, at all events.'

'May I have the pleasure of this dance?' said the Colonel, as the band struck up a quadrilla. 'I know it is useless to ask you for a waltz.'

The dance over, he led her to a chair, and after a moment's gay badinage, was about to resign his place in favor of other claimants for her smiles, when he saw a sudden pallor overspread her features.

'Miss Alice, you are ill!' he exclaimed, anxiously. 'Let me get some water.'

It was scarcely a moment before his return, but even then he was shocked at her white, drawn face.

'Call my sister,' she said to another gentleman with her, while Colonel Terry had gone for the water, and both reached her at the same time.

'Lucy, take me home,' she whispered. 'I am dying.'

'Oh, no, darling,' said her sister tenderly; 'you will be well in the morning.'

As quickly as possible the carriage was called, and the sick girl placed in it.

When they were just starting, Colonel Terry wished them good night, expressing his hope that Miss Alice would have recovered by morning. She put out her hand, and exerting her strength, said distinctly: 'Yes, I shall be well in the morning. Tell Charley —' her voice failed, and lifting her slim white hand she loosened the flowers she wore at her breast and put them into the Colonel's hand. 'Give these to him—yes—in the morning.' Her voice died away into a faint whisper, and her head fell back on her sister's shoulder. The lady who had acted as their chaperone hastened to apply restoratives, and the carriage rolled swiftly away.

The next morning, when Colonel Terry called to inquire after the invalid, he had no need to ask, for from the door there floated the mournful insignia of death. Shocked beyond expression, that hardy soldier turned away, unable to even offer his services if they were needed. He went again after awhile, and saw Mrs. Cameron, the hostess of the sisters during their visit. From her he learned the brief details of Alice's death. Her attack had been a sudden spasm of the heart, and she had never rallied. She had spoken but once, and they caught her lover's name and a repetition of the words, 'In the morning.'

'Poor Charley! Who will tell him!' groaned the Colonel when the lady's voice ceased. 'You are his best friend,' she answered. 'I think no one else can do it so gently.'

'I can't,' he replied, shaking his head. 'I would rather face a battery. Why, you didn't know, you can't think how his very life seems bound up in her, and now—'

They buried her next morning; six of Picton's friends carried his dead love to her grave, and then came sadly back, each questioning who would bear the tidings to the gallant sabreur far away with the old brigade.

That night the order came to join the old command, and by daylight the troops were miles away. As they reached the vicinity of the appointed rendezvous a desultory firing warned them of an approaching conflict. Presently they formed themselves in the midst of a portion of the command, drawn up in a piece of woods overlooking a sloping field, which, on the opposite side, rose to a sharp eminence, on the brow of which was posted a Federal battery.

Further to the right the firing had become sharper, and soon the roll of musketry swept all along the line.

'I say, Barclay,' called out Colonel Terry, as that officer passed him, 'have you seen Picton yet?' And as Barclay shook his head, added: 'Tell the boys not to let him know yet. Wait till this is over.'

'All right; I'll tell them,' answered Barclay as he rode away.

'The old General will be wanting that battery the first thing they know,' said one of the men, as a shell exploded over their heads. 'They had better keep it quiet.'

'Thar! What did I tell you?' he added, biting off a huge piece of 'long green.' 'Thar go the Mississippi boys now.'

As he spoke a tawny column moved out and swept gallantly out of the woods. But as they reached the center a murderous round of grape and canister tore through their ranks, and the column broke in confusion. Three times their leader rallied them to the charge, and three times they were shattered by the galling fire.

'Tell you what, boys,' called out the private who had before spoken, 'thar's fun coming now. That's Gage's bugle. The old regiment want some of the pie?'

He stooped and felt his saddle-girth as he spoke, then straightened himself and waited for the command, for he was 'one of the boys.' The next moment there was a ringing cheer from the ranks as General Forrest rode up.

'Boys,' he exclaimed, pointing with his sword, 'I want that battery captured. One regiment has tried and couldn't take it. Now I want you boys to do better than that. I am going to lead you, and I want you all to follow me.'

Another cheer was the answer, as the men fell into the ranks.

'Charge!' and down the slope rode the gallant old regiment, never faltering as the grape-shot swept through the serried ranks, closing each gap as it was made by the deadly fire; on, on, following the lead of the tall figure at the head of the column, till they rode right over the death-dealing guns, 'sabering the gunners there,' and the woods gave back the ringing echoes of the famous 'rebel yell' as the victory was won.

Won! Yes, but at a fearful cost. That fearful slope was drenched with the blood of the Southland's bravest sons.

After the charge Colonel Terry found himself face to face with Charley Picton. 'My God, how can I tell him?' muttered the Colonel to himself as the gallant young fellow rode towards him, holding out his hand.

'It takes the old regiment to do up things in style!' he said, grasping the Colonel's hand. 'Say, Terry, did you see Miss Alice? Coleman has just got back from Memphis, and he told me she had gone on a visit to some friends in C——'

But as he spoke he suddenly put his hand to his side. 'I am shot!' he gasped faintly. It was true. A stray bullet had struck him in the side, and Colonel Terry caught him as he reeled from his saddle and rode with him to the field hospital.

When the surgeon examined the wound he shook his head doubtfully.

'I know a nurse worth twenty doctors,' whispered Picton with a smile. 'Terry, can't you fetch her to me?'

Through the night the Colonel stayed with him. Once he wakened and repeated the question he had asked just before he was shot.

'I saw her, yes,' the Colonel answered huskily. 'She sent you some flowers.'

The blue eyes lighted with a tender glow, and Picton held out his hand.

Silently Colonel Terry took from his breast pocket the withered flowers, a spray of ivy and a half-open white rose, and laid them in his outstretched hand.

The wounded man slept. But in a couple of hours he awoke, much worse, and the surgeon in his rounds told the bronzed watcher that the end was near.

'Terry,' and the Colonel bent his head to catch the faint accents, 'I'm dying; I wouldn't mind—only—poor Alice! Tell her gently, please—she loves me, you know—and I, oh, Terry! it is hard to leave her. My poor darling!'

For a moment the Colonel could not answer. Then, choking back a sob, he said, slowly and distinctly:—

'Charley, Alice is waiting for you. You are not leaving her, but going to her.'

A bewildered, troubled look came into the wistful blue eyes.

"Don't you understand me, Charley? She is dead. We buried her there in C——. I wouldn't tell you before, dear old boy. But now you will be with her before you have time to grieve after her. She died with your name on her lips, murmuring of meeting you in the morning.'

He understood now, and a smile of relief flitted across his pale lips. 'Dear girl,' he murmured. 'I am so glad she will not have this grief to bear.'

Then he slept again and the hours passed on until the eastern sky brightened with the solemn dawn of light.

'Terry!' The word was but the faintest whisper, but the watcher instantly bent his head to listen.

'It is morning,' came the faint, gasping accents, and again the white lids drooped over the blue eyes. Five—ten minutes passed. Then Colonel Terry lifted the dead hands and crossed them over the pulseless breast, reverently covered the still white face, and turned away.

His two friends had met once more—'in the morning' of a fadeless day.—New York Express.

UPSETTING MOSES.

Jim Manly began to talk.

'I say, deacon, Darwin's theory of evolution is a little hard on the first chapter of Genesis. Of course we don't know yet how it will turn out, but it looks a little as though they were going to upset Moses.'

The deacon made no answer. He surely must have heard Jim's remark. Presently he was observed to be counting his fingers slowly and with a pause for thought between each enumeration. After awhile Jim ventured to ask,—

'Counting up your saw-logs, deacon, aren't you?'

'No,' said the deacon, 'I'll tell you. Your remark has set me to thinking, I was just counting up how many times in the course of human history somebody has upset Moses. First of all, two old jugglers named James and Jambres undertook this, but they failed. Then a certain king named Pharaoh went at the work of upsetting. He must have found it more of a work than he anticipated, for he has not reached home yet. Then three leaders of liberal thought—Korah, Dathan, and Abiram—went at the job. They failed in the upsetting part; but they secured a bit of a ranch for themselves, which they and their children hold in quiet possession until this day. Later on, a king named Nebuchadnezzar entered upon the upsetting business. He did not succeed, either. He spent seven years chained to a stump, and when he had served out his time he had changed his mind, and was a sadder and wiser man. His successor met with a still greater disaster, and in a similar attempt.

Since that time there has been no end of persons who have tried to upset Moses. Some ancient heathen—Celsus and Porphyry and Julian the apostate, and latterly these German critics and scientists, so called, are at the same thing. Years ago, when I chanced to be in Boston, I heard of a meeting of Freethinkers at a place called Chapman Hall. I could not resist the temptation to go just once and hear what they said. I found about twenty persons there; three or four of them were women, all the rest men. And what do you think they were engaged in? The old enterprise of upsetting Moses. And yet Moses has to-day in the synagogues of Boston more persons that preach him than he ever had before.

'It is astonishing how much upsetting it takes to upset Moses. It is like upsetting a granite cube. Turn it on which face you will, there it stands as solid as ever. The cube is used to being upset, and does not mind it. It always amuses me when I hear a fresh cry from some new quarter averring that some man whom nobody has ever heard of before has found out a sure way of doing what all others have failed in. And now here comes Jim Manly, and Moses has to be upset again. Ah, well!' and the deacon sighed.

There was a roar of laughter which made the rafters of the old saw-mill ring, and all joined in except Jim.—Altoona Tribune.

HOW TO COOK RICE.—Rice is becoming a much more popular article of food than heretofore. It is frequently substituted for potatoes at the chief meal of the day, being more nutritious and much more readily digested. At its present cost, it is relatively cheaper than potatoes, oatmeal or grain-grits of any kind. In preparing it only just enough cold water should be poured on to prevent the rice from burning at the bottom of the pot, which should have a close-fitting cover, and with a moderate fire the rice is steamed rather than boiled until it is nearly done; then the cover is taken off, the surplus steam and moisture allowed to escape, and the rice turns out a mass of snow-white kernels, each separate from the other, and as much superior to the usual soggy mass, as a fine mealy potato is superior to the water-soaked article.

A friend of the traveling public writes regarding the removal of cinders from the eye, that obstacles can in most cases be at once removed by immediately pressing the finger against the inner corner of the eye so as to stop the tear passage, keeping it there for about a minute, as the eye becomes watery, and upon the removal of the finger it is at once cleared. Do not rub the eye in the least, as by so doing the organ becomes much inflamed and the removal of any substance from it becomes a task.

Before going to war, pray once; before going to sea pray twice; before getting married pray three times.—Russian Proverb.

The Meaning of an Opal.

"See with what vivid and varied flame
I love you, Aglæ," said my love to me.
Always so tenderly he breathes my name,
The little name seems a caress to be.

Clasped in an endless circlet of fair gold,
An opal—less a jewel than a fire—
Burned with bright hues whose symbols sweetly told
Of deathless love, of truth, and pure desire.

We studied this keen opal, he and I,
Cheek warmed on cheek, hand safe in sheltering hand;
Here burned the blue of fair fidelity,
There shot the gold of wisdom and command;

Here vivid violet in which red and blue
Bent cunningly to tell the truth of love;
And then all suddenly love's crimson hue
Triumphantly all colors spread above.

Next sprang to light the emerald's fairy sheen,
Whereat I looked to him; he, whisperingly:
"Of old, Hope's sacred symbol was this green;
Profaned it means, love's tender jealousy."

Then glowed an orange light, where red and gold
Met in an oriflamme; and softly he Spoke yet again: "This union, sweet, doth hold
Sign of eternal wedlock that shall be.

"Fire-like, this trembling and most vivid light
Speaks deepest passion—hear you, my life?
Yet purely above flame reigns virgin white.
So dares this opal speak of you, my wife!"

ROSES AT NEW ORLEANS.

I don't believe there is any region on earth where roses grow in such abundance, variety, beauty and sweetness as they do in the New Orleans country. A Mississippi gentleman, to whom I have been indebted for information on various subjects, tells me that there is growing and in bloom at his home this moment a Lamarque rose vine eighty feet long. The stem is eight inches through in the thickest part. It was planted seventeen or eighteen years ago. It is twined around a veranda, and its gorgeous clusters of cream-tinted roses are splendid to behold. At New Orleans the Marechal Niel roses cause the Northerner to stare in speechless wonder. I saw one of the plants that must have been fifty feet long. I have seen vines of the same rose that long in the North, but they were scraggy and lean-looking and in the florists' greenhouses. At New Orleans they run wild and revel like a midsummer night's dream. The blossoms grow in gorgeous clusters of half a dozen or more, and the flowers are so large that they would more than cover the top of a large-sized coffee cup. A single one of the pale gold beauties will fill a room with perfume. They are as plenty down here as 'white top' in a Northern meadow. And they sell for $1 a bud up North. In some of the private citizens' yards in New Orleans there are as many as an hundred different kinds of roses all in bloom at once. They do not require protection from cold at any time. They all stand out-doors in the open ground, and many varieties bloom more or less all the winter through. The rose is a favorite flower at New Orleans. At the Jockey Club races we saw dozens of handsomely dressed ladies with exquisite bunches of rosebuds at their belts and elsewhere in their dresses—the sweet, lovely flower that Nature made, none of your abominable artificial things. The rose the French inhabitants of New Orleans are fondest of for decoration is called the 'Gold of Ophir.' Northern florists have it, but it is not common. The bud is especially prized for its beauty. It is a smallish rose, of a very pale pink, shading on towards the heart in a deep, rich gold color. Faint streaks of crimson touch the outer petals. It is one of the loveliest roses I ever saw.—New Orleans Commercial.

RAILROAD SOCIABILITY.

'Speaking about the sociability of railroad travelers,' said the man with the crutches and a huge watch pocket over his eye, 'I never got so well acquainted with the passengers on a train as I did the other day on the Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad. We were going at the rate of about thirty miles an hour, and another train from the other direction telescoped us. We were all brought into immediate social contact, so to speak.

'I went over and sat in the lap of a corpulent lady from Manitoba, and a girl from Chicago jumped over nine seats, and sat down on the plug hat of a preacher from La Crosse with so much timid, girlish enthusiasm that it shoved his hat clean down over his shoulders. Everybody seemed to lay aside the usual cool reserve of strangers, and we made ourselves entirely at home.

'A shy young man with an emaciated oil cloth valise left his own seat and went over and sat down in a lunch basket where a bridal couple seemed to be wrestling with their first picnic. Do you suppose that reticent young man would have done such a thing on ordinary occasions? Do you think if he had been at a celebration at home he would have risen impetuously and gone where those people were eating by themselves and sat down in the cranberry jelly of a total stranger?'

'I should rather think not.'

'Why, one old man, who probably at home led the class meeting, and who was as dignified as Brother Jones' father, was eating a piece of custard pie when we met the other train, and he left his own seat, and went over to the front end of the car and shot that piece of custard pie into the ear of a beautiful widow from Iowa.

'People traveling somehow forget the austerity of their homes and form acequaintances that sometimes last through life.'

Water telescopes, which afford interesting observations of the denizens of sea or river, are of cheap and easy construction. "Chambers' Journal" gives the following directions: Procure a tube made of tin and funnel-shaped, about three and a half feet long and nine inches in diameter at the broadest end. It should be wide enough at the top to take in the observer's eyes, and the inside should be painted black. At the bottom or wide end a clear, thick piece of glass must be inserted, with a little lead in the form of a ring to weight the tube. When the instrument is immersed in clear water it is astonishing how many fathoms down the observer can see. Norwegians employ this instrument largely in ascertaining the position of herring shoals and in their cod fisheries.

She was impressed. Angelina: 'I have been to hear Rev. Mr. Mistigush. He gave us a beautiful sermon. He is a very learned man.' Frank: 'What makes you think so, dear?' Angelina: 'Oh, I know he must be, Frank. I couldn't understand what he was talking about. But it was a beautiful sermon.'—Boston Transcript.

'Mary,' said a mother, 'if I was a little girl like you, I should pick up all those chips.' 'Well, mamma,' answered Mary, 'aint you glad you are not a little girl?'

NEWSPAPER REPORTERS.

In talks and writings concerning journalism, the reporter has long been overlooked; even the intelligent general public habitually underestimates the importance of reporters. On the great city dailies the reporter is of as much importance as the editor-in-chief; without his assistance the forger of the editorial thunderbolts would be at a loss for his most scathing material. News from the four quarters of the globe is flashed to him by the telegraph wires, scaling mountain ridges and diving under ocean depths; of the doings in his own city the wires are mute. What is of interest to the vast and influential bodies of municipal tax payers must be unearthed by the reporter before it can be commented upon by the editorial wheel that grinds, but it is the nimble reporter who brings grist to the editorial mill.

How great a power the reporter really is in journalism was manifested in New York city some years ago—it was a long time since; James Gordon Bennett was still alive, and so was Horace Greeley, but both were old men, if silvered heads and beards make age. It was when A. A. Low, the then president of the New York Chamber of Commerce, had returned from a European tour. A grand complimentary banquet was given to Mr. Low at the Fifth Avenue hotel. His honor the mayor was there; so was Judge Brady; in fact, all the big guns of the bar, and all the famous editors, except the elder Bennett, who never went to dinners. After all the magnates were seated, the reporters were admitted—there were fourteen of them—and were taken to a long table which was not set for a dinner, though admirably adapted for writing purposes. The waiters trooped in with the viands, but ignored the reporters, who bore the slight until the courses had been served; then, by mutual agreement, they arose and tramped silently out of the hall in Indian file. Horace Greeley, Manton Marble, Jones, of the Times; Hudson, of the Herald; Brady of the Mail, and Brooks of the Express, saw the departure. Mr. Greeley laughed and said, 'D——d if the boys ain't serving 'em just right.' The guest of the evening looked on in dismay; he was primed with a long speech that he wanted well reported.

After an absence of two hours, the reporters returned from the bar-room of the hotel, where they had whiled away the time in sampling ice water, and perhaps something stronger. No soonor had they got back to their tables than waiters were sent to them with wine and cigars. Both were indignantly rejected. 'We are here to work, not to drink and smoke,' said the fourteen in chorus. The chairman of the committee of arrangements came to apologize; he was heard in grim silence. He said a special dinner should be provided. 'We are here to work, not to eat dinner,' answered the fourteen. To work apparently they went; pencils flew over paper; the speakers glanced nervously at the writers; they seemed to suspect their diligence; perhaps they thought it was not deserved at all.

Next morning confirmed their suspicions; the poor, snubbed reporters had got even with the millionaires, judges and lawyers. The Tribune had no reference whatever to the dinner; the Herald had twenty lines; the World apologized that the Low dinner was crowded out; in the Times there was a stickful dictated by the editor, who smelt a mouse and hurried to the office from the dinner to find not a line of it, just as he had expected.

All the reporters were severely reprimanded by their chiefs; one of them—him of the Herald—lost his place, for the elder Bennett was a merciless master; he dismissed men for the veriest trifles, but his shrewd managing editor re-engaged all the valuable ones as fast as they were discharged by the inexorable proprieter, who, in the last decade of his active life, did not know his employes, with perhaps five exceptions, by sight.

However, the poor-in-purse reporters discomfited the millionaires, and from that distant day to this the reporters have not been snubbed at any of the grand public dinners given in New York.—Printers' Circular.

Mr. Peter Henderson, the well-known agriculturist and horticulturist, is of the opinion that millions are lost to farmers and gardeners every year by neglecting to 'firm' the soil over seeds after sowing, a process which is of much importance, especially when the earth is dry or likely to become so. Not only are the less important garden operations injured by such neglect, but even corn, cotton, wheat turnip and other important crops of the farm often fail, in hot and dry soils, by being sown without being firmed sufficiently to prevent the dry air from shriveling or drying the seeds. Mr. Henderson has made experiments showing that seed over which the earth had been firmly pressed down germinated sooner and grew better than seed sown near by over which the earth had not been firmed. Mr. Henderson considers that this firming of the soil is even more important in the case of plants than in the case of seeds, as their rootlets are more sensitive to the influence of a hot, dry atmosphere.

The postmaster-general has recently decided that any postmaster who gives out papers to others than subscribers, or allow any one to read a paper and then put it back in the box for the subscriber unless by special permission, is liable to be removed: and such practices by any postmaster will be just cause for removal. The reason for this decision is that complaints have been made from various sections by subscribers to newspapers that their papers are constantly read by persons who are too penurious to subscribe for them, and that when they got them they were in a condition scarcely to be read.

A contemporary says: "It is worth noting that more than seventy-five per cent of the failures in business circles are of men who do not advertise, or do so spasmodically, and of course without results. On the other hand, the firms who have successfully conducted their affairs through panics and perilous times, have been bold and systematic advertisers, keeping themselves and their business prominently before the public."

Two ladies thus exchange notes on the manner in which they spend the day:—"You see, I always get up at 10, and ring for my maid, and get dressed." "How long does that take?" "Oh, ever so long. You see, the girl takes a full hour to do my hair." "A full hour? Mercy! What do you do while she is fixing it?" "I go out in the garden and take my morning walk!"

He who expresses in his conduct justice and charity accomplishes the most beautiful works; the good man is, in his way, the greatest of all artists.—Victor Cousin.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JUNE 24, 1882.

GUITEAU'S appeal to the supreme court for a writ of habeas corpus has been refused, and his only remaining chance for escape from the gallows is a pardon or commutation of sentence by the President, who will hardly be likely to come to his aid.

MONEY goes easy with Congress. The pension bill appropriating $100,000,000 was passed by the House without debate, and the river and harbor bill went through with a rush, though it called for the expenditure of $17,000,000 in all sorts of streams. The treasury will be emptied of its surplus soon enough, when Congress fairly gets at it.

IT is given out that Crongressman Crapo will decline to run for Congress again, whatever may be the result of the campaign for the Governorship. This will be a sore disappointment to the other fellows who have an eye on the State House, and who think it would be too bad to call so valuable a Congressman away from Washington, and all that sort of thing.

THE New York Civil Service Reform Association advises government employes not to pay the assessments made upon them by the Republican congressional committee, and announces that the attention of the attorney general and other prosecuting officers of the United States is to be called to the matter. We hope they will have backbone enough to do their whole duty in the premises.

SENATOR HOAR has reported a bill to the Senate providing for the succession to the Presidency in case of the removal of the President and Vice President by death, or from any other cause. The bill names the secretaries of state, treasury, war, attorney general, postmaster general, secretary of the navy, and secretary of the interior, as the successors, in the order named. This would seem to make a pretty thorough provision for any possible contingency, and this, or some measure of the kind, ought to be adopted, but there is little probability that it will be at the present session.

THE tariff commission has been completed by adding the names of Alexander R. Boteler of West Virginia and Wm. H. McMahon of New York. Mr. Hayes of this State is to be chairman. The Utah commission has also been announced, and consists of Alexander Ramsey of Minnesota, A. L. Paddock of Nebraska, G. F. Godfrey of Iowa, A. B. Carlton of Indiana and J. R. Pettigrew of Arkansas, the last two being Democrats. The President seems to have quite a well developed faculty for nominating for office men of whom the people never heard before. He doubtless thinks it a good plan to develop some of the latent and hidden talent of the country in important positions.

A TEMPEST OF DESTRUCTION.

A tornado of terrible power swept through portions of Iowa, Missouri, Illinois and Kansas last Saturday, destroying an immense amount of property and many lives. The editor of the Des Moines Register, who has traveled over its track, says that "the tornado made a swath through a thickly settled portion of Iowa, some 150 miles in length and an average of half a mile in width, extending from points south of Ames, in the centre of the State, and swept in the shape of a crescent to South English, in Keokuk county. In the southeastern part of the State 69 are dead and 500 wounded, half of the latter grievously hurt, and probably a fifth of them fatally. Over 300 families have had their homes totally destroyed and there are now at least 1500 homeless and in want. The loss in property will exceed two million dollars and may reach three millions. In the town of Grinnell alone over $600,000 in property was destroyed. It will take at least $300,000 to put the people there beyond need and distress; $100,000 at once to put the wounded in a condition to be cared for; $1,000,000 at the lowest to keep the sufferers from want and to help them to put the humblest of roofs over their heads. Iowa College has had all its buildings destroyed, its 400 students made homeless, and has suffered a loss of $75,000. The condition of the other towns and farming communities is fully as pitiable and helpless. Many people were bereft of their houses—not a splinter being left as large as a finger, not a shred of furniture as large as a skein of silk, and hundreds have no clothing left except the clothes they had on. Little children with both parents killed, were left maimed and wounded themselves. Every condition of woe exists that most tenderly appeals to the pity of the human heart. Wounds inflicted by debris that filled the air like chaos, by electric balls of fire that seemed to traverse every inch of space and that exploded with fearfully fatal effect, will, many of them, defy all skill and nursing, even with the tenderest care." The fury of the storm was shown by its taking houses to a height of 1000 feet, carrying large flocks of cattle through the air for thousands of feet and dashing them down dead in heaps. Thousands of animals now lie rotting in the track of the tornado. An earnest appeal for help is made, contributions to be sent to J. B. Grinnell, or the mayor, at Grinnell, Iowa.

A tornado visited St. Louis and other points in Missouri last week Friday night. At Kansas City the damage amounted to $200,000. Considerable havoc was played with boats on the Missippi. The storm also extended to Kansas. At Leavenworth five ladies were killed.

Springfield is making preparations for a lively time on the 4th of July, and will have running races, boat, canoe and bicycle races, a ball game, competitive drill by the companies of the 2d regiment, and fireworks in the evening. The exercises are to begin at 9 a. m., on Hampden Park, and continue through the day without interruption. Prizes to the amount of $1500 are offered in the various contests, and two bands of music will furnish music for the day. Geo. A. Murray, manager of the skating rink, has charge of the arrangements, and the exercises of the day will undoubtedly draw large crowds to the city from the country around.

A man at Cohoes, N. Y., came near losing his life last week, by partly swallowing a trade dollar which his little daughter put in his mouth while he was asleep.

Some of the shade trees on Main street have such low-hanging limbs that people passing on the sidewalks have to "duck" their heads, to avoid having their hats knocked off. The limbs should be trimmed up.

Joseph Barrett, who does painting in the shop at Tenneyville, left his vest hanging in the shop Thursday morning during a temporary absence, and when he returned it was missing, with his gold watch and chain and some money. It is supposed to have been stolen by some tramps.

A party of 15 or 20 men went to Barrett's Junction on a spearing expedition last Saturday night, and caught almost a bushel of fish in two or three hours, while one of the largest members of the party caught a good big "flounder," in consequence of stumbling over an unseen rock.

Austin Davis of Glendale has left an egg on our table measuring 7½ by 6½ inches in circumference, as a specimen of the kind of work his hens are turning out. C. E. Dewey goes one better and brings us an egg measuring 8¼ by 6¼ inches, laid, he says, by "a direct descendant from Old Grimes' speckled hen."

The Catholic bazar at Wales Hall has had a successful run this week, and promises to net a good amount towards liquidating the debt upon the church. The operetta, "A Quarrel among the Flowers," and the concert Tuesday evening called out a full attendance and were very enjoyable, so much so that the operetta was repeated last evening.

S. W. Lawrence, Frank Sedgwick and O. P. Allen have put in concrete walks in front of their residences, and new crosswalks have been laid this week across Main street at the corner of Central, and at the south end of the railroad bridge, and across Pleasant street, corner of Church. A portion of the old walk in front of the Mansion House has also been re-covered.

The Palmer Carpet Co. have declared a 6 per cent dividend on their last six months' earnings, besides carrying a handsome amount to the surplus fund. The company's affairs have never been in a more satisfactory condition than at present, and their prospects for the future are very promising. A new floor is now being laid in the weave room, at an expense of about $1000.

In 1854 W. E. Hancock picked up a turtle at Blanchardville and marked his initials and the year on his shell, and then let him go. He has occasionally run across his turtleship since then, whose shell has also been marked by others, and this week he again came across the old fellow, minus one eye and part of his tail, to be sure, but apparently as chipper as ever, and good for any number of years more.

We have had a variety of weather this week. Monday gave us a foretaste of dog-day mugginess, and everybody sweltered under the boiling sun until the heavy shower of the afternoon cooled the air and brought the thermometer down quite a number of degrees. Tuesday was about as perfect as they make 'em, with its invigorating October air, and Wednesday was almost as good a day, while the succeeding days have been of about the same pattern.

The runner who got so badly "left" recently at the depot, does not seem to better his luck much. Last Monday he found a young man who wanted to go to Three Rivers, and to make a sure thing of it, took him to the hotel, where he promised to wait, but when the carriage came to the door he was nowhere in sight, nor could he be found, and with several quotations from scripture (?) the runner put up his horse, and made up his mind that he had been "sold again."

E. S. Gibbons has bought a large shoe store at Birmingham, Ct., and took possession on Monday. He has sold his store in this place to Carl Gibbons, who has been his assistant for some time, and E. M. Gibbons, of Granville, who will take possession on the 1st of July. Mr. Gibbons has been one of our most successful merchants, and will doubtless meet with a still greater measure of success in his new store, where he will carry a stock two or three times larger than that in his store in Palmer.

Timothy Shea, a soldier who deserted from the Springfield armory last August, was captured at Ludlow last week Friday by Sheriff Palmer, and returned to Springfield, from whence he has been taken to New York for trial by court martial. Shea is a very slippery fellow, and the sheriff, finding that he was at work in Silas Billings's cornfield, disguised himself and went to fishing in the reservoir, working along until he was near enough to grab the deserter, whom he handcuffed after a short struggle.

The meeting of the auxiliary visitors of the board of charity at the State Primary School last week Friday was quite largely attended, nearly 50 being present, among them Mrs. Virginia Smith of Hartford, Mrs. James Colt of Pittsfield, Mrs. Washburn of Greenfield, Mrs. Leonard of Springfield, Miss Boutwell, daughter of the ex-Governor, and Mrs. Daniel Richardson of Lowell, who presided. The visitors listened to a paper by Superintendent Tufts, had a collation, made a tour of the institution and heard the children sing and speak, and went away well pleased with their visit and with the general condition of affairs at the school, under the efficient direction of Col. Tufts.

The summer time table on the New London Northern Railroad will go into effect next Monday, when Hastings's train from the north will arrive here at 6.30 a. m., connecting with the new train for New London, which leaves here at 6.40 a. m., after the arrival of the "modoc" from the west, and reaches New London at 9.07, connecting with boats for Watch Hill, Block Island, Osprey Beach, Sag Harbor, etc. Downer's afternoon train south will leave at 2 o'clock, instead of 1.30, making close connection here with the day express from Saratoga, and the train for the north will leave at 2.04. The boat train going south will leave Brattleboro at 4.45 p. m.. arriving here at 6.56, and leaving at 7.05 as now. The new morning train is to leave New London on its return trip at 5.55 p. m., arriving at Palmer at 8.32, making close connection with the modoc for the west. This train will make it feasible for any one to spend the day at Osprey Beach, or other shore resorts in the vicinity of New London, or take a sail to Block Island, and return home the same day.

Dr. Ruggles's strawberries are beginning to ripen, and he is now picking from five to eight bushels a day. One day last season he picked 57 bushels, and will probably reach as high a figure this year when the season is at its height, but does not expect quite as extensive a yield of the fruit as last year.

The "local reporter of the Union at Indian Orchard," referred to in the Ludlow items of the JOURNAL last week as being sick at his home in that town, happens also to be the JOURNAL correspondent, and would thank the JOURNAL and the Ludlow correspondent for kind wishes for speedy recovery. He is happy to state that he is "himself again." It was neither "Jumbo" nor circus lemonade, but Ludlow water which upset him, and he would advise that the Ludlow belles be kept out of the water.

The N. L. N. R. R. Co. are extending their turnout track at the State line, and Agent Waldo Smith says that business is booming at the State line and the adjacent Summer resort.

Tramps in the lock-up are scarce to what they were a few years ago. It seems that after having once tried the hospitalities of the town they have no further desire in that direction.

Rumor has it that Manufacturer Cushman contemplates building another woolen mill, and there are surmises also of one or two other industries that will help the business interests in town.

E. F. Willis, the clothier, who has been confined to the house by illness for the past two months, is able to ride out, and hopes soon to greet his many friends and patrons at his store in Green's block.

The old town pump on the flat is played out, and there is a fine opportunity for some public spirited benfactor of man and beast to erect a monument ever to be remembered by imitating the example set by W. N. Flynt on North Main street.

The address of Rev. Mr. Byington and other interesting items connected with the dedication of the Horatio Lyon Memorial Library building are published in pamphlet form, and by vote of the town each family in town is entitled to one. Parties wishing extra ones can procure them at the library building.

Selectman Potter has widened the granite bridge near Johnson Stacy's, and thus made the roadway wider. Now if it could be arranged so that the road would not be quite so deep with worn-out sand, it would be a blessing to the traveling public. Why cant the road from North Monson southerly be made decent, to say the least?

The piece of road built last year in front of the M. E. church by digging out the fine, worn-out dirt and substituting cobble stones as a foundation and covering with new gravel, seems to wear almost equal to pavement, and if another piece was taken up and built in like manner it would be much cheaper in the end and much better than any other piece of road in town.

Tuesday was a pleasant day for the anniversary exercises at the academy, and the renewed interest in the welfare of the school was manifest by the large attendance at the graduating exercises at Central Hall. The trustees and students marched from the academy to the hall, where the exercises began at 10.30 o'clock. There were four in the graduating class, the exercises of the class being as follows: Essay, with salutatory, Thad. L. Cushman; essay, Hattie F. Cushman; class history and prophecy, S. S. Parks; essay, with valedictory, Ada G. Wing. The parts taken by the class, and the unanimous voice of the audience, all plainly indicated that Principal Cummings has infused new life into the institution, which can but bring up the academy to its former position as one of the best of institutions for a preparatory course. Diplomas were awarded for the first time, and those present were reminded of former days in the prosperity of the academy, and can but think that the principal will soon have the school one of the foremost of its kind in New England. Excellent music was furnished by Coenen's orchestra of Springfield. At the close of the exercises an alumni association was formed, with Rev. Julius H. Ward of Boston president, and C. R. Dudley of Monson secretary, In the evening the school, together with many friends, met in the academy hall and enjoyed a social time, the orchestra furnishing music for the occasion.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Michael McGinnis of Thorndike was arrested last week Friday night for drunkenness, and on Saturday morning paid a fine of $1 and costs, amounting to $8.65. On the same evening, on complaint of the selectmen, Dennis Dailey, John Crimmins and Jeremiah Keefe of Thorndike were arrested for overdriving a horse. The next morning they paid a fine and costs amounting to $19.20. The roughs from out of town will soon learn that Ware is not a pleasant place to visit when they are under the influence of liquor, with the present board of town officers.

Miss Hattie Tuttle, preceptress of the Moody school at Greenfield, together with her assistant, by invitation of Evangelist Moody will sail for Glasgow at the close of the present term. The Misses Sandford have sailed from New York for a three months' ramble in Europe. They accompany a party of old friends and schoolmates from New York. Deputy Sheriff Robinson has just returned from a nine-weeks' trip through England, Ireland, Belgium, France, Germany and Switzerland.

Fire was discovered in the barn of James McMahon on West street at 2 o'clock Wednesday morning, and it was burned to the ground with its contents, including a pair of horses. It was only by the efficient efforts of the firemen that the house was saved, and it was considerably burned in the roof. His pair of gray horses were out and thus escaped. The fire is supposed to be incendiary, as the lock was found broken and the door open by the first one at the fire. The loss is estimated at $2000, covered by insurance.

Miss Mamie Grover, the accomplished 17-years-old daughter of Wm. Grover, agent of the Hadley Thread Co., at Holyoke, fell in love with her father's colored coachman, and kept up clandestine meetings with him at every opportunity, in spite of her father's threats. On the 13th ult., they fled to Springfield and were married, but Mr. Grover took his daughter home the next day. Hall fled, but was last week Friday arrested for bigamy at Hartford, where he has a wife and two children living. He was released the next day, however, to avoid futher publicity, and Miss Mamie will have opportunity to repent her strangely foolish infatuation.

Capt. James S. Dwight of Springfield, commander of the ship Freeman Clark, was murdered by the Chinese cook and steward on the night of the 27 ult. in his cabin, and the first lieutenant narrowly escaped the same fate. The murderers were killed by the crew and their bodies thrown overboard. The provocation for his murder is believed to have been the captain's order forbidding the Chinamen to smoke opium, as it made them stupid. The day before the murder he had their room searched and the opium found in it thrown overboard.

Dangerous counterfeits of the $10 greenbacks of the issue of 1875 are in circulation, and thousands are said to have been put out in New England.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

A SPRINGFIELD ENTERPRISE.

It is no longer necessary to go to Boston or New York for fine Furniture, since a first-class Furniture Warehouse has been established in Springfield. D. Burns, at 409 Main street, has made a success of keeping a fine quality of Furniture, and people are finding it out.

LACE AND MADRAS CURTAINS, DRAPERIES, LAMBREQUINS, ETC.—This season Mr. Burns has introduced a superior stock of Lace and Madras Curtains, Lambrequins and Draperies. He secured the invaluable aid of Benjamin George, a first-class workman and artist from the noted house of H. A. Turner of Boston. By his skill and taste a very large increase of business in this department has been realized. This marked success arises from the fact that people of wealth and taste are now convinced that they can adorn their homes as well by going to Springfield as to Boston or New York. Mr. Burns's artist visits the homes of his patrons and makes special designs adapted to each house, thereby fitting up the windows in a much neater manner than by a general selection of goods.

UPHOLSTERY GOODS.—Mr. George has also charge of the Upholstery Department. Extra pains are taken to upholster in a lasting manner. No excelsior is used, but only the very best of material enters into this work. People are finding out that the very superior upholstery done at Burns's is a new thing in Springfield, and they show that they can appreciate such work by the great demand for it which is coming in to Burns's warerooms. Nothing better is made in Boston or New York.

MAHOGANY CHAMBER SETS.—Just now there is a sharp demand for elegant chamber sets wrought in mahogany. Burns has at all times these most beautiful sets, fresh from the factories at Grand Rapids, Michigan. Many of your readers can see these sets in Holyoke, Northampton, Easthampten, Westfield, Wilbraham and other places, where owners have bought them at Burns's.

OTTOMAN BED LOUNGES.—This elegant parlor ornament becomes at night a most comfortable bed. The lounge is by far the finest article of the kind in the market. It is upholstered in a very ornamental style and made of the best materials. A large sale of them causes Mr. Burns to keep a full stock.

HOW HAS THIS GREAT ENTERPRISE BEEN BUILT UP?—When Mr. Burns began four years ago he determined to keep the best furniture store in Western Mass. He put quality before quantity, though in the latter he excels all others in that city. He believed in giving every man his money's worth. Every job was well done, because he knew it paid to do it well. He bought the best goods, employed the best workmen and sold at moderate advance on cost. To-day he leads the trade in this section in all classes of furniture. People will be cordially received and shown about the warehouse, even if they are not ready to buy. 4w13

IS THE

STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE

Facts, say the professors, are obtained by the concurrent opinion of the largest number of best able to judge. This principle applies to the Steinway pianos, as the largest number of people pronounce them to be the best, and the firm is doing the largest volume of business of any piano-making concern in the world. Purchasers, by paying $75, $100, $150, $200 or $300 more, according to the style, for them than for any other pianos; dealers, by comparing every other piano with them; makers, by putting their pianos below them in price, and then claiming that they are pretty nearly as good, because they "have some of Steinway's workmen," or "foreman from Steinway's," or "use Steinway's scales," etc., all proclaim that

THE STEINWAY

IS THE ACKNOWEDGED STANDARD PIANO,

Not only in this country, but also in Europe it stands as far ahead of all other pianos as it does in America.

This fact being established that the Steinway is the best, of course the next best is that which is nearest like it, which purchasers can decide for themselves by listening and comparing with the standard.

Her Name.

"I'm losted! Could you find me, please?"
Poor little frightened baby!
The wind had tossed her golden fleece,
The stones had scratched her dimpled knees.
I stooped and lifted her with ease,
And softly whispered, "Maybe.

"Tell me your name, my little maid,
I can't find you without it."
"My name is Shiny Eyes," she said.
"Yes, but your last ?" She shook her head.
"Up to my house 'ey never said
A single fing about it."

"But, dear," I said, "what is your name?"
"Why, di'n't you hear me told you?
Dust Shiny Eyes." A bright thought came.
"Yes, when you're good; but when they blame
You, little one—is't just the same
When mamma has to scold you?"

"My mamma never scolds," she moans,
A little blush ensuing,
"'Cept when I've been a frowing stones,
And then she says (the culprit owns):
'Mehitable Sapphira Jones,
What has you been a-doing?'"

—Wide Awake.

FRESH AIR WHILE SLEEPING.

The most dangerous kinds of malaria are caused by breathing the air of close bedrooms while sleeping at night, and diseases of this kind are contracted in this way when they are supposed to be caused by the air out doors. A great many people imagine out door air is more hurtful than that inside. They are greatly mistaken; for what could be more poisonous than people, and sometimes several children in addition, sleeping in a room with the windows closed, perhaps a kerosene lamp burning down low, during the whole night? The air necessarily must be rank with foulness to create disease. Hardly too much air can be brought into a bedroom. Ventilation should be had without wind blowing over a person's head, and there are several ways to do that. If double windows are used, the outside lower sash can be raised, and the inside lowered from above, which will create perfect ventilation; or if no weather sash are used, then a board placed at the bottom and the window raised five or six inches behind the board, thus forcing the cold air to the top of the room, will be good ventilation without draft. This is used in many of the schools. A large fire-place in a bed-room is the best ventilation of all, especially if a small fire is kept in it, and the only wonder is that people who build houses do not have more accommodations of this kind for their sleeping rooms. It is, however, an ordinary circumstance for people to suppose they are having a most tremendous airing at night if they leave a bed-room door open in another room, or in a hallway, the air of either rooms or hallway not being ventilated as a rule, and only adding more poison to the sleeping-rooms. Impure out-of-door air, as a rule, is better than the poisonous air of a close, unventilated sleeping room.

One of the oldest books in existence is a collection of proverbs by Ptahbotop, an Egyptian who lived somewhere about the time of Abraham. Among his injunctions is the following, which we commend to the writers on woman's emancipation, domestic economy and other topics, who may think that the subjects which they discuss are fresh and suggested by the increased intelligence of modern civilization: 'If thou be wise, furnish thy house well; love thy wife, and do not quarrel with her; deck her out, for fine dress is her greatest delight. Purpose to make her glad as long as thou livest. She is a blessing which her possessor should treat as becomes his own standing. Be not unkind to her.' This counsel is none the less useful at the present day, because 3500 years have elapsed since it was given.

A schoolmaster was very partial to one of his pupils, and very severe to another. One day they were both tardy. He called them up on the floor. 'James, my boy,' said he to the favorite, regretfully, but kindly, 'why were you late?' 'You see, sir,' replied James, 'I was asleep, sir, and dreamed I was going to California, and thought the school-bell was the bell of the steamboat.' 'That will do, my boy,' said the teacher, glad of an excuse to shield him; 'always tell the truth, my boy. And now,' said he to the other, sternly, 'where were you?' 'You see, sir,' said the urchin, candidly, 'I was waiting to see Jim off.'

The steam-cars run so rapidly that they get away ahead of a child's age, so that the boy or girl who was fifteen when he entered them is no more than six or eight by the time the conductor comes along. Boast of our progress as you may, there's no denying that the children are behind the age on railways and at the entertainment ticket offices.—Boston Transcript.

Depend upon it, in the midst of all the science about the world and its ways, and all the ignorance of God and His greatness, the man or woman who can say, 'Thy will be done,' with the true heart of giving up, is nearer the secret of things than the geologist or theologian.—George McDonald.

O most grateful burden, which comforts them that carry it! The burdens of earthly masters gradually wear out the strength of those who carry them; but the burden of Christ assists the bearers of it, because we carry not grace, but grace us.—Chrysostom.

Thirteen female physicians are practising in Clayton, Iowa, and at a recent fire there were not well men enough in the town to run the engine out. It is one grand incorporated hospital.

IN THE WHOLE HISTORY OF MEDICINE

No preparation has ever performed such marvellous cures, or maintained so wide a reputation, as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which is recognized as the world's remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs. Its long-continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it universally known as a safe and reliable agent to employ. Against ordinary colds, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders, it acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering, and often saving life. The protection it affords, by its timely use in throat and chest disorders, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. From their knowledge of its composition and operation, physicians use the CHERRY PECTORAL extensively in their practice, and clergymen recommend it. It is absolutely certain in its healing effects, and will always cure where cures are possible.

PIANO CHAIR.

TEACHERS, SCHOLARS and FINISHED AMATEUR AND PROFESSIONAL PLAYERS WILL ALIKE WELCOME IT.

The practice of sitting at a piano or organ practising for hours together, without a support for the back, is tiresome in the extreme, as every player knows; and, giving way to the tired feeling, very many, especially young persons, attempt to rest or relieve themselves by assuming a position which is not only ungraceful, but unnatural and unhealthy, and are often permanently injured thereby. To rest the back, it is not always necessary to incline the body to the rear. The body may lean forward, but if there is something against which the back may be pressed, it affords a sense of support, a feeling of ease which can be obtained in no other way, and really forms a true rest. The ordinary piano stool is not a comfortable seat under any circumstances, yet no material improvement was made upon the original design until this Back Piano Chair was invented. Although this Chair has been before the public but a short time, it has already attracted marked attention, and has gained the highest approval of all who have tested it. We are confident that it will fully meet the needs of thousands who have long been hoping and anxiously looking for some such improvement.

MR. WM. WESTFALL,

OF DUCHESS CO., N. Y., 80 YEARS OF AGE, SUFFERED CONTINUALLY FOR MANY YEARS FROM STONE in the BLADDER.

Great age and painful disease are a sad combination. Yet Mr. William Westfall, formerly of Rock City, Duchess Co., N. Y., now of Washington Hollow, in the same county, came to the office of Dr. David Kennedy, the eminent physician and surgeon of Rondout, N. Y., some time since, in a condition to excite the sympathy of the most cold-blooded and hard-hearted person in the word. We say he came—he was, rather, carried to the Doctor's office, for he was totally helpless, and bore the weight of 80 years besides. He had suffered long from Retention of Urine, and had all the symptoms of an aggravated case of calculus formations in the bladder. The usual instrumental examination revealed the presence in the bladder of a urinary calculus of uncommon size. Dr. Kennedy frankly told Mr. Westfall that, owing to his age and debility, an operation was out of the question, but that he could, by the prescription of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," together with local treatment, make him comfortable and leave him to live out all his days. The outcome of this was that the patient enjoys good health to this day.

THE REASONS WHY

Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is being extensively used by our people are as follows: It is a combination of vegetable alteratives. It is pleasant to the taste, adapted to both sexes and all ages, is effective in affording immediate relief in all cases of Kidney Troubles, Liver Complaints, Constipation of the Bowels and derangements peculiar to women. At the same time it purifies the blood, thus giving tone and strength to the system debilitated by disease or age. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists. 4w13

Kisses.

Sitting to-night in my chamber—
A bachelor, frigid and lonely—
I kiss the end of my pipe-stem;
That, and that only.

Reveries rise with the smoke-wreaths,
Memories tender surround me;
Girls who are married or buried
Gather around me.

School-girls in pantalets romping,
Girls that have grown to be misses;
Girls that liked to be kissed, and
Liked to give kisses.

Kisses! Well, I remember them!
Those in the corner were fleetest;
Sweet were those on the sly; in the Dark were the sweetest.

Ann was tender and gentle;
To woo was almost to win her;
Her lips were as good as ripe peaches
And cream for dinner.

Nell was a flirt and coquettish;
'Twas: Catch me and kiss if you can, sir!
Could I catch both—ah! wasn't I
A happy man, sir!

Anna has gone on a mission
Off to the South Sea sinners;
Nell is a widow, keeps boarders, and
Cooks her own dinners.

Charlotte and Susan and Hattie,
Mary, Jane, Lucy and Maggie;
Four are married and plump, two Maiden and scraggy.

Carrie is dead! Bloom sweetly,
Ye mignonette, over her rest!
Her I loved dearly and truly,
Last, and the best.

Thus I sit smoking and thinking—
A bachelor frigid and lonely.
I kiss the end of my pipe-stem;
That, and that only.

CURSED.

Col. Imlah Holland was a wealthy New York grain dealer, who had come up into New England, and bought for a quiet summer retreat for himself and family a large and picturesque hill farm, whereon were a trout-brook, a pickerel pond, partridge coverts, and a substantial, roomy house, quite comfortable although somewhat old, and large enough to accommodate the parties he annually brought up with him from the city for the hunting and fishing.

Mr. Holland was a pleasant, social man, who always had a cheery word for his new rural neighbors, and asked so many questions about farming, stock and crops that he became very popular.

One mild April morning, as his neighbor Farmer Stoddard was driving by 'Holland Farm,' as the rich grain merchant's country residence was called, he was surprised to see the owner come bowing and smiling toward the gate. 'I ran up from New York last night to see if it was beginning to thaw out here,' he said, 'and to carry out a little project which I have had in my head all winter. I have thought that in a place like this some sort of business that would make a local market for the products of the neigboring farms would be a blessing to the owners. It has occurred to me that I would put two or three cider mills and a distillery or two over on Stony Brook. That would use up all the superfluous grain hereabouts, as well as all the apples which I hear are frequently left in great quantities on the ground to decay, here in these immense orchards.'

'There were cider mills and a distillery in town when I was a lad,' said Farmer Stoddard, gravely.

'Is that so?' queried Col. Holland, still chirk and pleasant in his manner. 'Did they do a good business?'

'I will show you what they did if you will step into my buggy and ride with me two or three miles out to my brother's.'

'All right,' replied Col. Holland. 'I am glad to go with you. I thought I would speak to a few of the leading farmers about it, and you are the first one I have met since my return. I don't know that I ever met your brother whom you are taking me to see.'

'Quite likely not,' replied Farmer Stoddard. 'He owns a farm in a retired locality in the north part of the town. He was chosen overseer of the poor at our last town meeting, and all our paupers are now quartered there. Here we are,' said the intelligent, thrifty farmer, as he drew up his sleek bay filly in front of a long, low, red house, on the south side of which a dozen wretched samples of humanity were out sunning themselves. They all looked clean and well kept, but were very decrepit, and looked out from sore, red eyes set in very sodden and blotched faces; two, one man and one woman, were insane. The woman, who was known as 'Aunt Huldah,' was greatly taken with the handsome, finely dressed, portly city man, and ran after him as he with Mr. Stoddard walked through the dooryard toward the large barns, calling upon her companions to see what a beautiful lover had come after her.

'Poor, demented creature!' said Col. Holland, pityingly, as he passed through a gateway and escaped from her vehement protestations of affection.

'It is a sorrowful sight indeed,' said Mr. Stoddard. 'She lived near the distillery I was speaking to you about. In those, her younger days, she used to board and help those employed about it. By degrees she came to like the cider-brandy made there, and of which nearly everybody drank as freely as of water. Finally the doctors said her brain had become paralyzed. She is harmless, and so is kept here rather than at the asylum, where for a year or two she was homesick and very unhappy. She has no near relatives, and of course no property.'

'This is Capt. Ball, one of our former leading business men,' continued Mr. Stoddard, pausing before a thin, bent, pallid-faced old man who was sawing wood in a weakly way before the woodshed. 'When I was a boy the captain carried on a driving business.'

'Yes, yes,' spoke up the poor creature in a wheezing voice, endeavoring to straighten himself up, 'I owned the distillery, and did do a thriving business, to be sure, but somehow I lost money. My wife used to say that I was the best wholesale customer I had. Perhaps I was, for I never went dry in those days—although I've had to since I came here; he! he! A good many folks used to say that the old still was of no benefit to the town. Perhaps it wasn't, but it made a market for what was raised about here. I tell you I made a prime article of cider-brandy, and corn-whisky too, yet there were always some folks in town that cursed me for it.'

'Where are the men who worked for you in your distillery, your neighbors who had money invested in it, and those in this region who were the largest customers of your fine brands of brandy and whisky?' asked Mr. Stoddard, in his grave, quiet way.

'He! he!' laughed the captain again, 'those who are not in the burying ground are here, waiting to be carried there.'

'It is a fact,' said Overseer Stoddard, coming up now and greeting his brother, after an introduction, 'Col. Holland, that every one of these "boarders" of mine was brought here directly or indirectly by the old distillery. That little hunchback girl over there by the door is a grandchild of the old captain with whom you were just now talking. His only son married a daughter of 'Aunt Huldah.' They were both burned to death one midnight, not many years ago, through the carelessness of the drunken husband, who set their house on fire. That poor little creature who was terribly mutilated by burns, but was saved, is the unfortunate offspring of that union. Oh, it was hell upon earth over there in the ''Still village' when I was a boy. At last the more respectable part of the community would stand such works no longer, and one dark night the distillery was leveled to the ground. The old captain there was fully paid for his loss—in fact much more than the property was worth—but soon he drank up the money, as well as the rest of his property, and he and his sole living descendant are here to-day.'

'I am a man of the world, and have seen something of the ill effects of rum in my day, but not exactly in this light,' said Col. Holland, as he and Farmer Stoddard were driving homeward. 'I like this old town, however, and want to do something to benefit it in the way of business.'

'Build a cheese factory,' suggested Farmer Stoddard.

'Eureka!' cried Col. Holland. 'I will do so; and what is more, I will start a vinegar making establishment. Your Vermont cheeses and pure cider-vinegar will sell like hot cakes in New York.'

And so to-day the grain that is raised in the fertile meadows and plains in Northford feeds the sleek, Juno-eyed cows that graze on the sweet pasturing of its hillsides, and the luscious milk goes into the best of cheeses; while the cartloads of apples that were formerly left to decay in the large and prolific orchards are utilized by the vinegar factory. The farmers are more prosperous than ever, and bless the day when Col. Holland first came to pass his summers there, and put a little enterprise into them withal.—Annie A. Preston.

THE QUEEN OF ALL.

Honor the dear old mother. Time has scattered the snow-flakes on her brow, plowed deep furrows on her cheek, but is she not sweet and beautiful now? The lips are thin and shrunken, but those are the lips which have kissed many a hot tear from the childish cheeks, and they are the sweetest lips in the world. The eye is dim, yet it glows with the soft radiance of holy love which can never fade. Ah, yes, she is a dear old mother. The sands of life are nearly run out, but feeble as she is, she will go further and reach down lower for you than any other friend on earth. You cannot walk into a midnight where she cannot see you; you cannot enter a prison whose bars will keep her out; you can never mount a scaffold too high for her to climb that she may kiss and bless you in evidence of her deathless love. When the world shall despise and forsake you, when it leaves you by the wayside to die unnoticed, the dear old mother will gather you up in her feeble arms and carry you home and tell you of all your virtues until you almost forget that your soul is disfigured with vices. Love her then tenderly, and cheer her declining years with holy devotion. It is one of the strongest commands in the decalogue, "Honor thy father and thy mother."

RECENT POINTS IN ETIQUETTE.

Say 'Good-bye,' not 'good morning.'

Upon leaving the room one bow should include all.

Never wait over fifteen minutes for a tardy guest.

Upon introduction, enter at once into conversation.

A note requires as prompt an answer as a spoken question.

Regrets in reply to invitations should contain a reason therefor.

Strangers arriving should notify friends by card or by their presence.

At a table you are required to thank the one who waits on you.

You should exchange calls with individuals before inviting them to your house.

Only letters to unmarried ladies and widows are addressed with their baptismal names.

To return a personal call with cards enclosed in an envelope signifies that visiting between the persons is ended.

Unless there is a great difference in age, a lady visiting should not rise, either on arrival or departure of other ladies.

It is probable that before long the famous Mocha coffee will disappear from the markets of the world, though doubtless some inferior variety will ursurp its name. The imports have been declining for some time past and a recent Italian consular report makes known that the once flourishing Mocha (or Mokka, as the writer calls it) is now reduced to a group of sixty poor huts, with about 400 inhabitants who have hard work to keep body and soul together. The coffee plantations are lying waste and uncultivated and the once busy harbor is full of sand. All the European merchants have departed save one Italian, and he is engaged, not in exporting coffee, but in importing European wares for the Arabians.

A medical man in New Orleans, who is fond of his little joke, called on a colored minister and began to catechise him. 'Why is it,' said he, 'that you are not able to do the miracles that the apostles did? They were protected against all poisons and all kinds of perils. How is it you are not protected now in the same way?' The colored preacher responded promptly: 'Don't know about that, doctor. I 'spect I is. I've taken a mighty sight of strong medicine from you, doctor, and I is alive yet.'

Two young women of Kentucky and Ohio, respectively, have received a patent for a pan to be sunk in an ironing-board, for the reception of the flat-iron when not in use. The fracture of joints, burns, and other casualties caused by flat-irons will be known no more. This device is a simple iron mould, one inch deep, eight inches long and five wide, to be fitted to the board, and yet for this patent the young women were offered $5000 the day after receiving their papers.

There is no sphere of life so narrow or confined that it does not afford opportunities for doing good to some one.

Passing around the hat is one way of getting the cents of the meeting.

Charity.

Only a drop in the bucket,
But every drop will tell;
The bucket would soon be empty
Without the drops in the well.

Only a poor little penny;
It was all I had to give,
But as pennies make the dollars,
It may help some cause to live.

A few little bits of ribbon,
And some toys—they were not new,
But they made the sick child happy,
Which made me happy, too.

Only some outgrown garments,
They were all I had to spare,
But they'll help to clothe the needy,
And the poor are everywhere.

A word now and then of comfort
That costs one nothing to say;
But the poor old man died happy,
And it helped him on his way.

God loveth the cheerful giver
Though the gifts be poor and small;
What doth He think of His children
When they give nothing at all?

CHANGE OF AIR.

I pretended to be very busy with my writing, but in fact was all ears for an earnest talk among my lady callers all about change of air.

Mrs. F. exclaimed, 'I ought to know by this time. I tell you it is bad to go too high up. Better stay down at the foot of the mountain. Even if you go up a little way, the air will not agree with you half so well.'

Mrs. C.—'I am sorry to differ with you, Mrs. F., but I can't breathe the air at the foot of the mountain. If you go up as far as the grove where the captain gathered those beautiful ferns for us, there the air is perfectly delicious.'

Mrs. W.—'Well, ladies, I don't see how you can breathe the air on that side of the mountain at all. To me it's dreadful. But on the east side the air is a perfect tonic. Next season I advise you to try the east side.'

Mrs. C.—'Oh, Mrs. W., I am astonished to hear you say so. I tried the east side once, and the air nearly killed me. I really believe I should have been in my grave if I had stayed there any longer. But on the west side, up there near the grove, the air is delightful; it really affects one like champagne.'

After this question of atmospheric influences had been discussed in this scientific way for half an hour, our brave little Miss B. entered, and the ladies appealed to her.

'Come, Miss B., you have been everywhere; now where do you say the air is the best?'

Miss B.—'Wherever I have had the most to do, there the air is the best; though to be perfectly frank about it, I have never noticed about the air. I don't think I was ever particularly conscious about breathing or the air, until I heard all this talk about change of air. The atmosphere you fashionable ladies breathe at the opera, at your parties, in your furnace-heated houses, and in your air-tight bed-rooms, I confess is too much for me; but when I am dressed so I can breathe, and am busy, mind and body, in the open air, or at home with open windows, I find the air all right, in Boston, in San Francisco, in the valley, on the mountain.'

I sprang to my feet, clapped my hands and cried out:

'Bravo! bravo! bravo! my little woman! I never heard so much sense in so few words, about the hygiene of the atmosphere, in my life. And I will put you into print just as soon as I can, that others can benefit by your wisdom.'—Dr. Dio Lewis, in Golden Rule.

THE YEARLY FEET-WASHING AT VIENNA.

At the Hofburg, the principal palace of the Austrian emperor, a ceremony took place on Thursday which has probably no parallel throughout all the states of Europe. It is an old and familiar event known as the 'Green Thursday feet-washing.' It took place, as usual, in the splendid 'Hall of Ceremonies.' On each side of the hall was a table, each of 12 covers, one for the old men, the other for the old women. The palace was filled with dignitaries, including the ministers, the corps diplomatique, and the various court officials. At 10.30 o'clock the old people, having received the sacrament in the court chapel, were brought to their seats at the table. They were all dressed in the old German costume, the dresses being presented by the emperor. At 11 o'clock the clergymen conducting the ceremony appeared. They were followed by the emperor, the empress, the crown prince and crown princess, and the archdukes and archduchesses. The emperor served the old men, who take the food home after the ceremony, while the empress and the Crown Princess Stephanie and the archduchesses served the old women at their several tables. The characteristic part of the ceremony was the taking off a shoe and stocking from one foot of each of the old people, after which the emperor and empress wiped the feet of the aged people with towels moistened from the golden ewer. After this their majesties hung a purse, containing 30 silver pieces, round the neck of each of the old people. At the conclusion of the ceremony, the latter were sent home in court carriages, each with a basket of provisions.—London Standard.

When all the buffalo are killed off, if Uncle Sam can be induced to quit feeding the red devils on canned goods and other government rations they will have to put up at an American boarding house, and then dyspepsia will wind up the noble red man. The Secretary of the Interior should cut this out and paste it where he will see it again.—Texas Siftings.

Said the pastor: 'We never used to get any money in the contribution box, but lately I have arranged to have two or three of our most prominent men and pretty girls stand in the vestibule while the people come in, so they can see who puts the money in, and the box is doing quite well.' It takes a business man to run a church as well as a circus.

'Father, when a hen sets on an egg three weeks and it don't hatch, is the egg spoiled?' 'As an article of diet, my son, it is thenceforth a failure, but as a species of testimonial it is strikingly aromatic and expressive.'—Rome Sentinel.

Lost patience is never found again. You may be paitient next time; but the spoken word cannot be called back—not with prayers and tears.

'Get your symptoms of malaria now, if you want the doctor to order you to the seashore in July,' is the advice of the Detroit Free Press.

My son, you ask who or what a nobody is. Well, my dear young man, a nobody is a prominent woman's husband.

THE WIFE.

I have often had occasion to mark the fortitude with which women bear the most overwhelming reverses of fortune. Those disasters which break down the spirit of man, and prostrate him in the dust, seem to call forth all the energies of the sex and give such intrepidity and elevation to her character, that at times it approaches to sublimity. Nothing can be more touching than to behold a soft and tender female, who has been all weakness and dependence, and alive to every trivial roughness while treading the prosperous paths of life, suddenly rising in mental force to be the comfort and support of her husband under misfortune, and abiding with unshaken firmness the most bitter blast of adversity. As a vine, which has long been lifted into sunshine, will, when the hardy plant is rifted by the thunder bolt, cling around it with caressing tendrils and bind up the shattered boughs; so is it ordered by Providence that woman, who is the mere dependent and ornament of man in his happier hours, should be his stay and solace when smitten with sudden calamity; winding herself into the rugged recesses of his nature, tenderly supporting the drooping head, and binding up the broken heart. I was once congratulating a friend, who had around him a blooming family, knit together in the strongest affection. "I can wish you no better lot," said he with enthusiasm, "than to have a wife and children. If you are prosperous, there they are to share your prosperity; if otherwise, they are there to comfort you." And, indeed, I have observed that a married man, falling into misfortune, is more apt to retrieve his situation in the world than a single one; partly because he is more stimulated to exertion by the necessities of the helpless and beloved beings who depend upon him for subsistence, but chiefly because his spirit and self-respect are kept alive by finding that though all abroad is darkness and humiliation, yet there is still a little world of love at home, of which he is the monarch. Whereas, a single man is apt to run to waste and self-neglect; to fancy himself lonely and abandoned, and his heart to fall to ruin, like some deserted mansion, for want of inhabitants.—Washington Irving.

SAMBO'S DIRECTIONS.

Riding out from Murfreesboro toward Nashville, I turned to the right to strike a part of the battle-ground, and in going half a mile I found three roads branching off. All looked alike, and after puzzling over it I rode back to where a negro was working alongside the road, and asked: 'Can you tell me where that right hand road leads to?' 'Yes, sah. You keep right on dat road an' you'll rize a hill. Den you'll go freu some woods. Den you'll go down hill an' cross a branch an' go up anoder hill an' be right dar.' 'Right where?' 'I dunno, sah; but it's a plain road.' 'Where does the middle one go to?' 'Wall, you'll go freu de woods fust. Den you'll come to an ole mule balked wid a load of wood. Den you'll wind aroun' a hill an' take a slant to de right, an' by keepin' straight on you'll see de place.' 'What place?' 'I dunno, sah; but I reckon you'll fin' him down in dar somewhar'.' 'And the other road?' 'Dat's de bes' one of all. Arter you branch off you'll see a fence. Den you'll see a big log ba'n. Arter you pass de ba'n you'll likely see my brudder Jim cuttin' out cotton. Doan' mind him, but keep on across de branch, slew aroun' to de left a leetle, and arter you riz de hill you am all right.' 'How all right? Where'll I be then?' 'I dunno, sah; Ize nebber been up as fur as dat. If you doan' want to see nobody nor go nowhar' nor find nothin', you better stick to de pike. You'll meet somebody on de pike who'll tell yer whar to make a short cut to hit de 'zact plantashun.'—Detroit Free Press.

The late Dr. John F. Gray, America's pioneer homœopathist, once gave a poor sewing girl who came to him for advice, a vial of medicine, and told her to go home, take the dose and go to bed. She replied that she could not do so, as she was dependent on her daily earning for a living. 'Then,' said he, 'I'll have to change the medicine a little.'—Taking back the vial, he wrapped it in a ten-dollar bill, and returning it to her repeated the order: 'Go home and go to bed, and take the medicine, wrapper and all.'

A bibulous individual was introduced to a lady who had been represented to him as quite a talented artist. He greeted her by saying: 'I understand, madam, that you paint.' She started, blushed deeply, and, recovering herself after a few seconds said, with as much acidity of tone and style as she could command: 'Well, if I do paint, I don't make any mistake and put it on my nose.'

'Your future husband seems very exacting; he has been stipulating for all sorts of things,' said a mother to a daughter, who was about getting married. 'Never mind, mamma,' said the affectionate girl, who was already dressed for the wedding, 'these are his last wishes.'—Hartford Times.

Detroit leads the country in furnishing practical proof that the color line is obliterated. Within the last week no less than six Irish women who claim a home in the city of Straits, have cast their lot—or rather all six of their lots—in marriage with six colored men.

A little boy of 4 years, standing in the moonlight by his sister, aged 6, said to her: 'Isn't God a good man, Nelly, to give us such a beautiful moon?' 'Oh, Freddy, don't call God a man, for if ever there was a gentleman, I'm sure God is one.'

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JULY 1, 1882.

GUITEAU was hung at 12.40 yesterday afternoon. His lawyer, Reed, made every possible effort to save his neck, but the President refused to interfere; and it is a relief to know that the career of the miserable assassin is at an end.

IOWA has this week adopted, by a large majority, a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture or sale as a beverage of intoxicating liquors of any description. The Western States are getting ahead of their sister States in the East in this matter.

A LOT of Chinese laborers in Cuba want to return to China through this country, but have been refused the privilege, as the recently-passed Chinese immigration bill will not allow it. And yet, there will be a good deal said next Tuesday about this being the land of the free!

PROMINENT Worcester people, to the number of some 600, have signed a petition to the Governor for the pardon of Lucius W. Pond, the forger. Mr. Pond committed a grievous sin, with open eyes, fully understanding its nature and the penalties he was incurring. Why, then, should he not serve out his full term of imprisonment, as a poorer and less prominent man would?

THERE has been almost a complete blockade of freight at New York and Jersey City in consequence of the strike of freight handlers, who asked for 20 cents an hour instead of 17. Their demand seemed reasonable, in view of the fact that they do not have work all the time, but the railroads would not yield, and are fast filling the places with new men, most of them immigrants. The railroads, by the way, announce an advance of over 20 per cent in West-bound freight rates, to take effect to-day. This is all right, of course, and the public must pay what they say, as new railroads cannot be hired to take their places.

THE Republican Congressional Committee will not win much glory from its action in assessing government employes for funds to carry on its work with. Chairman Hubbell wrote an impertinent letter to Geo. W. Curtis, chairman of the New York Civil Service Reform Association, taking him to task for attempting to "confuse the action or alarm the minds of the employes," and daring Mr. Curtis to proceed against him, but Mr. Curtis responded in a scathing letter in which he showed up the blackmailing system and the irresponsible organization of the Congressional committee in a manner calculated to make Mr. Hubbell feel decidedly cheap, if he has any feelings. If this committee can assess office-holders with impunity, then any other self-constituted committee may do the same. Indeed, the Republican office-holders in Pennsylvania have already been called upon for another "voluntary contribution" to help the Cameron State Committee in its work.

MORE TORNADOES.—Iowa was visited by two more destructive tornadoes last week. On Thursday the recently desolated town of Malcom was again the prey of the winds and rain, and a great amount of damage was done. At Pleasantville and Independence there was also great destruction, two men being killed at the latter place, and others hurt. On Saturday another tornado swept through O'Brien, Clay and Palo Alto counties, leveling houses, barns, and everything else in its track. The village of Primgar was partly destroyed, and Emmettsburg also suffered severely, while many farm houses were wrecked, and a dozen or more lives lost. Butler county, Neb., was devasted by a tornado on Sunday, a number of people being killed, and $50,000 damage done. Missouri, Kansas and parts of Illinois also suffered somewhat.

The principal features of the next exhibition of the New England Manufacturers and Mechanics' Institute at Boston, in the fall, will be a complete display of the natural resources of the Southern States. An acre of space in the exhibition building will be devoted to the reproduction of the essential features of last year's exhibition at Atlanta, Ga. Three Southern railroads will display the products of field, forest and mine along their routes, and Southern manufacturers will exhibit staple products, while the eight acres of room in the building will give ample space for other exhibits. It is designed to have a fine art exhibition this year with all the rest.

It is feared that there will be great suffering and destitution among the immigrants in Manitoba next winter. It is estimated that the new-comers will number 100,000 before that time, and they are wholly unprepared for the severe winters of that section, while they can get nothing from their lands this year. In Winnipeg alone, there are now 3000 people living under canvas.

From March 1 to June 1 the missionaries of the American Sunday School Union in the Northwest established 198 new Sunday schools and brought 1068 teachers and 7100 scholars into them, besides aiding 222 old schools which contain 991 teachers and 8966 scholars.

Edward Benjamin, coxswain of the Columbia crew, was drowned at New London, Ct., last week Friday, being taken with a cramp while in swimming, and the race between the Columbia and Harvard crews, which was to come off on Saturday, was indefinitely postponed.

Five cars of an express train on the Long Branch Railroad ran off a bridge into Parker's Creek Thursday morning, killing two men, injuring several persons fatally, and about 80 slightly, among the latter being Gen. Grant.

Go to Hitchcock's for Flags, Pistols, Crackers, Fireworks, and all kinds of 4th of July goods, soda, lemons, oranges, bananas, pine apples, Paris green and insect powder.

The oil stove mentioned last week in this column was constructed on the lamp principle. The "Monitor" is the only kind which is not, is absolutely safe, and it has no wire gauze to get gummed up and cause it to smoke. E. J. Wood.

The village schools closed yesterday, with the exception of the high and second primary schools.

Full moon to-day, and another on the 30th, July being the only month in the year which is thus favored.

The "concreters" have departed for other fields of labor, but will return by and by to do some more work here.

The ladies of the Four Corners Methodist society had a strawberry festival at Wales Hall Wednesday evening.

The nights continue remarkably cool, and blankets are as necessary and comfortable as they were two months ago.

Beware the tempting ice water, during the hot weather. It is a foe in disguise, and should be used very sparingly.

Look out sharp for fires next Tuesday. Fire-crackers are capable of an endless amount of damage in this direction.

The last of the Raymond California excursionists returned home last Saturday, passing through here on the noon train for Boston.

The 1.24 p. m. express for New York on Monday consisted of an entirely new train of cars, just out from the Boston & Albany shops at Allston.

J. J. Moynahan has removed his undertaking warerooms from McGilvray block to No. 14 South Main street, where he has more room and better conveniences for doing business.

Landlord S. J. Stone has connected the parlors and sleeping rooms of the Mansion House with the office by means of electric bells. This is the first hotel in town to be furnished with this convenience.

A wire has been run to the new mills of the Palmer Wire Co., to connect them with the telephone exchange, and an instrument will also be placed in their office in the village, to be located in Wales Hall block.

Miss Emma Weller, soprano at St. Paul's church, and formerly of the Boston Theatre Co., took the part of "Josephine" in "Pinafore," as produced at Monson Thursday and Friday evenings under the direction of Prof. Sherlock.

F. R. Lawton's little daughter Pearl celebrated her 5th birthday Wednesday afternoon with a gathering of nearly seventy young friends at her home on Central street, and Miss Pearl was the happy recipient of a number of birthday gifts.

One more chance for roller skating. Mr. Hitchcock announces three sessions to-day at Wales Hall, forenoon, afternoon and evening, and all who are fond of the rollers will of course be on hand. Mr. Hitchcock contemplates opening a rink at some seashore resort for the summer, possibly at Osprey Beach, near New London.

Some of the berries from Dr. Ruggles's strawberry beds are just "immense." The Doctor picked one the other day measuring 8 inches in circumference, and has sold many quarts of them which measured but little less. Mr. Fox has the sale of the berries in this place, and we know whereof we speak, when we say that they are delicious.

James Ryan, a boy of about 15 years of age, was arrested at Ware by Sheriff Palmer last Saturday, for placing obstructions on the track of the Ware River Railroad. He was admitted to bail in the sum of $1000, and will have his trial before the district court to-day. He is believed to be guilty of several offenses of the kind during the past year or more.

A subscription paper is being circulated amoug our business men at last, to see if funds enough can be raised to procure a watering cart for the sprinkling of Main street. The response is already quite generous, and it is to be hoped that it will be ample enough to insure the work being done, for the dust is now uncomfortably abundant, and will be still more so as the season advances.

Miss Minnie L. Converse, daughter of J. S. Converse of East Saginaw, Mich., and granddaughter of Hiram Converse of this town, graduated from the East Saginaw high school last week with high honors, delivering the valedictory. Miss Minnie attained the rare average of 99⅔ for the past four years, a higher mark than was reached by any other of the 4000 scholars in the city, and her father remarks with pardonable pride that "old Palmer stock is still at the head." She will continue her studies at the Ann Arbor University.

There is some danger that the Palmer Cornet Band will be broken up by the removal of members from town. Some half-a-dozen of them have already gone away, and it is of course a difficult matter to find men readily to make good their places, while some of the remaining members find it impossible to leave their work always when wanted to play in the band. Palmer has never before had so good a band as the present one, and it will be a real loss to the place, and a matter of genuine regret, if the organization cannot be sustained.

At the request of the savings bank officials, the managers of the Boston & Albany Railroad have agreed to extend their bank wall at the Main street bridge far enough east so that the bend in Church street can be straightened by filling in between the bridge and Haynes's tin shop. This will make a decided improvement in the street, and when it is done the bank will continue its concrete walk from the bank building to the bridge, while a single cross-walk, instead of two as originally contemplated, will be put in by the improvement association across Church street, at the corner of Main.

The most notable wedding of the season occurred at the State Primary School on Thursday afternoon, when Miss Annie R. Tufts, daughter of Col. Tufts, superintendent of the institution, was wedded to Mr. Henry R. Viets of Boston. A large company of relatives and friends were assembled from different parts of this State, Connecticut and the Sandwich Islands, with the officers and the children of the School. The presents were many and valuable. The rooms were finely decorated by the officers of the school, and the couple were married under an arch wrought with the American flag, oak leaves, ferns, laurel and cultivated flowers. The catering was by William Tufts of Boston.

The trustees of the Palmer Savings Bank at their meeting last Saturday declared a 2 per cent semi-annual dividend, payable today, carried $1000 to the guaranty fund, and $980 to the reduction of the premium account. The net earnings of the past six months were $14,434, and the deposits have increased $43,000 in that period. The condition of the bank is shown by its statement of June 28th, as follows: Liabilities—Deposits, $581,303; guaranty fund, $6500; undivided profits, $5491; total, $593,294. Assets—Real estate loans, $266,992; personal, $180,956; on bank stock, $5550; to towns, $3500; public funds, $27,600; bank stock, $35,400; railroad bonds, $10,000; real estate, $26,835; taxes and expenses, $2316; premium account, $5980; deposited in bank, $25,500; cash, $2665; total, $593,294.

Fourth of July will be observed locally by a horse trot on the park next Tuesday afternoon, with two purses of $100 each, for 2.34 and 2.50 classes respectively, and $50 for green horses owned in town. The children at the State Primary School will observe the day much the same as last year, with long and short races, games, jumping, leaping, fencing, wrestling, three-legged, blind, sack, wheelbarrow and potato racing, salutes, extra dishes for dinner, and fireworks in the evening. The Boston Duck Cornet Band will have a picnic at Bondsville, and the French Canadians at Three Rivers and Thorndike will also picnic. The Grand Army Post have accepted an invitation to join in the festivities at Belchertown, where there is to be quite an extensive celebration, while a good many people will doubtless attend the sports in Springfield. There will be a large gathering at Lake Pleasant, with Henry Ward Beecher among the attractions, and the New London Northern Railroad will sell round trip tickets from Palmer to the Lake and return for $1.65, which includes admission to the grounds.

The assessors have about completed their labors, and we are indebted to them for the following figures from their books: Valuation—real estate, $1,558,235; personal $811,008; total, $2,369,243. Increase over 1881, $111,726. Total number of polls, 1373, a gain of 62 over last year; tax on polls, $2 each; rate of taxation, $13 per $1000, being $1 less than last year. St. Thomas's bazar closed last Saturday evening, when the drawing of the articles took place, and as far as can be ascertained the receipts will amount to as much as last year, if not more. The picnic given by the St. Jean Baptiste society last Saturday was an enjoyable affair. The Springfield society came out with Little's band, to participate. The streets along the line of march were finely decorated, as were also the hotels and many dwelling houses. The street parade consisted of the Indian Orchard and Springfield societies and Little's band, the Orchard French band, several trade teams, carriages containing prominent citizens and the clergy of the place, and a few emblematical and allegorical teams. Business was generally suspended during the afternoon, and the picnic was well attended.

Next Tuesday will occur the picnic of the local land league, and the management promises a fine entertainment. The running match will be particularly interesting, and the following runners have entered: Collins of Chicopee, Crowley of Holyoke, Losee, King and Allen of the Orchard, Kane of Thorndike, and an unknown of Westfield. Others will probably enter also. The first prize is a $30 gold medal and championship of Western Massachusetts, second prize a $12 silver medal, and the third prize $10 in money. Hon. James Dempsey of Middletown, Ct., is to deliver an oration on "The Day We Celebrate," and with dancing, racing and jumping the day will undoubtedly be highly enjoyed by all who attend.

Mr. C. has worked hard, early and late, and has the sympathy of the people here for himself and family. His assets will probably not be over five cents on a dollar.

In the report of the exercises of the graduates of Monson academy in last week's JOURNAL, only four graduates were mentioned. It should have been five. Miss Alice E. Darling gave an essay, and also the following class ode:

On the strand are friends and schoolmates
Waiting for the boat to start,
Bearing us from happy school-days
To the future, long and dark;
School-days that were brief and fleeting,
That have left us all too soon,
But though brief, were bright and crowded
With sweet flowers of lasting bloom.

As we linger here we're gazing
Down the future all unknown,
Eager now to learn its secrets,
Trying still to pierce the gloom.
Round our boat the waves are peaceful,
Far the breakers' roar we hear,
But our star of hope, bright gleaming
Steals their power to make us fear.

For success lies e'er before us,
We may grasp it if we will,
But while seeking this world's honor
Let our aim be higher still;
So that when we reach the harbor,
In the sunset's golden light,
"Well done" shall our welcome home be
To the Heavenly mansions bright.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The Reform Club have adjourned their meetings until Fall.

Dr. O. W. Roberts has moved into the residence recently occupied by W. C. Sheldon.

Chas. D. Gilbert has returned this week from his European trip, which has been extended to over six months.

The Oregon Engine Co. are soon to have an elegant sign placed over the entrance to the engine house, the work of H. Page.

Dr. E. C. Richardson is out of town on account of ill health. It is reported that he has had a slight stroke of paralysis on the left side. Dr. E. H. Guild is to take charge of his practice during his absence.

Principal C. F. Merrill and Assistant Miss S. C. Wood, of the Ware high school, were unanimously re-elected by the school board for another year, but Miss Wood has resigned. Another of our teachers, Miss Emma Weeks, has also resigned, and Miss Sanford is to take her place.

The attention of the authorities might be profitably directed to the cases of a few young men who are evidently bound to live without work, and are loafing about our streets. It might be a blessing to them and the community if they were sent up for vagrancy, as such young men do not make desirable citizens.

The wife of Henry C. Hester, a German, aged 52, committed suicide by drowning on Tuesday morning. She had been somewhat insane for some time, and was stopping at the house of Thomas Carney in the south part of the town. She made her escape from a window before the family arose, and was found in the river a few hours later.

The selectmen have the past week offered a reward of $1000 for the conviction of the party or parties who set fire to the barn of James McMahon, on West street, on the morning of the 21st ult. This sum ought to be an inducement for some competent person to look up the matter. If the parties can be convicted the town can well afford to pay, in order to get rid of the person or gang who are up to this sort of business, and if no one can be convicted the town is better off by the offering of a large reward, by gaining the name of doing what we can in favor of law and order.

Last week Friday about 80 friends of the school gathered at the high school room, to witness the closing exercises of the year. Prominent among them were ex-Principal Walker, the school board, and clergy of the village. The exercises were excellent in their character and interesting in their nature, and well delivered. Particularly to be commended were the essays by Misses Belle Hyde, Fisherdick and Sprague. The young ladies' recitations were superior to those of the boys. Miss Bruce's description of a "Sunday School in India" was life-like and well received by the audience. During the year the school has considerably advanced in scholarship, and the school committee spoke in high praise of the labors of the instructors. It is a noticeable fact that no parent of any of the pupils visited the school during the term, and only seven the last day.

The Ware liquor cases came out a complete triumph for law and order, despite the bribery and all the influence that could be brought to bear. P. J. Crowe settled his case, paying fine and costs amounting to about $76. J. B. Weismann paid in fine and costs $159.56, M. J. McArdle $169.04. Owen McArdle was cleared on two counts, on the other the fine and costs amounted to nearly $400. M. M. Hennebry's fines and costs amounted to nearly $500, and in another case judgment was suspended and he was ordered to quit the business and leave town. Sheehe paid about $180. During the trial of M. J. McArdle it was brought out that Hennebry and Sheehe had been trying to buy off the witnesses for the prosecution, and he did not betray them until the lawyer for the defense opened the subject, and then the witness was compelled to tell the whole story. The whole amount paid into the county treasury from Ware amounted to between $1100 and $1200. The result is a cause of much rejoicing among the better class of this community.

The seniors at Williams College "struck" the other day and virtuously declined to take their degrees because one of their number failed to pass examination and was refused a degree. They subsequently repented of their silliness, however.

July Magazines.

The Atlantic for July contains "The Bells of San Blas," the last poem written by Mr. Longfellow, the manuscript being dated March 15, only a few days before his last sickness, and this, added to its own merit, will give it peculiar interest to the admirers of the dead poet. The series "Studies in the South" is continued, the serials have interesting installments, while some of the other important articles are "The Political Economy of Seventy-three Millions," by Mr. Henry D. Lloyd; "Care for the People under Despotism," by O. B. Frothingham; "Shall Members of the Cabinet sit in Congress?" by Willard Brown. The poems, reviews and Contributors' Club all go to make an interesting number of this popular magazine.

Harper's Magazine for July has for a frontispiece a portrait of Emerson, engraved by W. B. Closson after the crayon drawing by Samuel Rowse, which is not only a fine portrait but shows the wonderful possibilities of wood-engraving, while Julian Hawthorne contributes a paper treating of the author himself, who is also written up in the Editor's Easy Chair by George William Curtis. The second part of "The History of Wood-Engraving" concludes with a rapid review of modern work, and is illustrated by fac-similes of old engravings; indeed the magazine seems to abound in illustrated articles including Octavia Hensel's reminiscences of Franz Liszt, with portrait. The usual number of solid articles, poems and short stories, with editorial departments full of interesting matter, complete an attractive number.

The North American Review has for its leading article a profound and sympathetic study of "Emerson as a Poet," by Edwin P. Whipple, who brings all his logic to prove that while he had command of only two or three metres, yet as a poet in the highest sense of the word, Emerson must take rank with the greatest geniuses of all time. "Hydraulic Pressure in Wall Street," by one who evidently knows, exposes many of the tricks and devices by which the unwary are lured to ruin and fictitious values are created. "The Ruins of Central America" records the crowning triumphs of the author, Desire Charney, as an explorer, namely, the discovery of a great ruined city in the country of the Lacandones, Guatemala. There are two papers on the civil service question. "The Things which Remain," by Gail Hamilton; "The Business of Office-Seeking," by Richard Grant White. Francis Marion Crawford, son of the eminent American sculptor, writes of "False Taste in Art," suggesting certain directions suited to art culture under the existing circumstances of life in the United States.

Our Little Ones is one of the best publications for children, the character of the reading matter, and the style of the illustration being such that every influence is toward refinement; and the July number is fully equal to any previous one.

The July number of the Eclectic is at hand, and, as it begins a new volume, it offers a favorable time for commencing new subscriptions. The number is an excellent one, and is illustrated with a fine steel engraving, entitled "Love's Confession." The table of contents is as follows: "A Word About America," by Matthew Arnold; "Charles Lamb and his Friends," by John Dennis; "Across the Yellow Sea;" "The Sun as a Perpetual Machine," by R. A. Proctor; "Wagner's 'Nibelung' and the Siegfried Tale," by Karl Blind; "Adrift," by May Probyn; "The Lady Maud," a sea tale, by the author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," etc.; "James and John Stuart Mill: Traditional and Personal Memorials," by J. S. Stuart-Glennie; "The last King of Tahiti," by C. F. Gordon-Cumming; "Oiling the Waves: a Safeguard in Tempest," by C. F. Gordon-Cumming; "What is There Left for Me to Say?" by Ethel de Fonblanque; "Three Great Dictionaries;" "The Story of a Block of Coal," by Prof. A. H. Green; "A Day at Margate," by Margaret Lonsdale; "Thackeray as a Novelist;" "Elk-Hunting in Norway," by Clement Bunbury; "Poor White Trash;" "Titles of Books;" "Good-Morrow and Farewell;" Literary Notices; Foreign Literary Notes; Science and Art; and Miscellany. Published by E. R. Pelton, 25 Bond street, New York. Terms, $5 a year; single copy, 45 cents; trial subscription for three months, $1.

The Season is a comparatively new monthly magazine for ladies, being yet in its first volume, but gives promises of great usefulness, being devoted wholly to fashion in furniture as well as dress, hair-dressing, needlework and all varieties of fancy work and decoration, to which so much attention is given at the present time. It is finely illustrated, there being two colored fashion plates, also two extra engravings of historical or national costumes each month, while the great variety of flat paper patterns, chapters on "Fashion," "Needlework," etc., render it a very desirable acquisition to the work-table at home. Published by The International News Company, 31 Beekman Street, New York. Price $3.50 per year, or 30 cents a number.

"The Villa Bohemia," by Marie Le Baron, is a spicy little work detailing the adventures and mishaps of four brave young ladies, on whose gate-post were inscribed the words, "No Man Permitted on these Premises under Penalty of the Law." The success of their experiment may be imagined, but if the summer tourist wants to laugh with little effort, let him obtain the book and see what became of the "Fair Bohemiennes." Publishers, Kochendoerfer & Urie, No. 200 Broadway, New York.

A copy of De Long's log-book has been forwarded to Washington. It gives a most pathetic account of the terrible sufferings and death of the party from starvation.

A HINT ABOUT IVY.

Those who have given any attention to decorating their rooms with living plants, are aware that there is none so useful for this purpose as the European Ivy (Hedera). Instead of waiting until falling leaves remind us of house-plants, and then grubbing up and potting an ivy, it is better to prepare the ivies now. This plant is always pleasing, whether used around a window-frame, over a doorway, run over the frames of pictures, or as we have seen it, carried completely around the cornice of a room. It will endure much neglect, and will amply repay all the care that may be given it in washing the dust from the leaves, and good culture generally. But we do not now speak of its culture, but would only say a word about starting it. It is most easily propagated. Procure branches two or three feet long or more; take any wide-mouthed bottle or jar; place some earth in it, perhaps a quarter full, add water to nearly fill the vessel, and, removing the lowest leaves, put the ends of the ivy branches in this thin mud. Set the whole in a shady place out-doors, or on the piazza, and add water to supply that which evaporates. In a few weeks the stems will have abundant roots, when they may be potted, and by autumn be much better for use in the house than any plants dug up from the ground. No plant yields more readily to training; it may be continued with a single stem many feet in length, provided all side-shoots that start are nipped off, or if several stems are desired, pinch off the growing end, and some will soon start out.—American Agriculturist.

To Evict Rats.—A writer in the Scientific American says: 'We clean our premises of the detestable vermin, rats, by making white-wash yellow with copperas and covering the stone and rafters with it. In every crevice in which a rat may go we put the crystals of the copperas and scatter in the corner of the floor. The result was a perfect stampede of rats and mice. Since that time not a footfall of either rats or mice has been heard about the house. Every spring a coat of this wash is given the cellar as a purifier, as a rat exterminator, and no typhoid, dysentery, or fever attacks the family. Many persons deliberately attract all the rats in the neighborhood by leaving the fruits and vegetables uncovered in the cellar, and even the soap tub is left open for their regalement. Cover up everything eatable in the cellar and in the pantry, and you will soon starve them out. These precautions, joined to the services of a good cat, will prove as good a rat exterminator as the chemist can provide. We never allow rats to be poisoned in our dwelling. They are so apt to die between the walls and produce annoyance.'

An extraordinary tricycle journey has been accomplished by the vice-president of the Lyons Bicycle Club, accompanied by his wife, on a two-seated machine. The travelers went from Lyons, through Nice, Genoa, and Rome to Naples, returning via Florence and Turin, the whole journey representing a distance of some 2,300 miles, being accomplished at an average of about fifty to sixty miles a day on the road.

There is much indignation in Cleveland because the army lieutenant in charge of the guard at Garfield's tomb opened the vault and unscrewed the lid of the casket to allow Gov. Sherman of Iowa to look upon the face of the dead. The features bore almost exactly the same appearance as on the day of the funeral.

Southern boys carried off the honors this year both at West Point and Annapolis. At the military academy, of the first four graduates two were from Missouri and one from Mississippi, and at the naval academy the cadet midshipman who graduated at the head of his class was a Virginian.

In order to comply with the city ordinance in Chicago against the emmission of dense smoke, the Pennsylvania railroad has been experimenting with coke as a substitute for coal, and is so pleased with the result that it is said that coke will be adopted in place of coal over the entire line.

The largest oil well in the world was struck in Cherry Grove, Warren county, Pa., on the 15th. It belongs to the Anchor Oil Company, and flows at the rate of 3000 barrels per day. The Murphy well and No. 646 are sending up 100 barrels per hour.

The grave of Emerson at Concord is always covered with fresh flowers. This is done by the young people of the town, who have a regular system about it, so that the flowers are never withered, but always bright and beautiful.

Ice frozen by machinery is now used almost exclusively in Southern cities, as it is cheaper than that brought from the North, except at seaboard places. The retail price has fallen from $3 per hundred before the war to $1.50.

The Brooklyn bridge, which was to cost $4,000,000, will absorb $16,000,000 before it is completed, while serious doubts are still entertained as to its safety.

PIANO CHAIR.

TEACHERS, SCHOLARS and FINISHED AMATEUR AND PROFESSIONAL PLAYERS WILL ALIKE WELCOME IT.

The practice of sitting at a piano or organ practising for hours together, without a support for the back, is tiresome in the extreme, as every player knows; and, giving way to the tired feeling, very many, especially young persons, attempt to rest or relieve themselves by assuming a position which is not only ungraceful, but unnatural and unhealthy, and are often permanently injured thereby. To rest the back, it is not always necessary to incline the body to the rear. The body may lean forward, but if there is something against which the back may be pressed, it affords a sense of support, a feeling of ease which can be obtained in no other way, and really forms a true rest. The ordinary piano stool is not a comfortable seat under any circumstances, yet no material improvement was made upon the original design until this Back Piano Chair was invented. Although this Chair has been before the public but a short time, it has already attracted marked attention, and has gained the highest approval of all who have tested it. We are confident that it will fully meet the needs of thousands who have long been hoping and anxiously looking for some such improvement.

Price, plain, $5.00; plush, $6.00;

FINE JOB PRINTING
AT THE
JOURNAL OFFICE.

A SPRINGFIELD ENTERPRISE.

It is no longer necessary to go to Boston or New York for fine Furniture, since a first-class Furniture Warehouse has been established in Springfield. D. Burns, at 409 Main street, has made a success of keeping a fine quality of Furniture, and people are finding it out.

LACE AND MADRAS CURTAINS, DRAPERIES, LAMBREQUINS, ETC.—This season Mr. Burns has introduced a superior stock of Lace and Madras Curtains, Lambrequins and Draperies. He secured the invaluable aid of Benjamin George, a first-class workman and artist from the noted house of H. A. Turner of Boston. By his skill and taste a very large increase of business in this department has been realized. This marked success arises from the fact that people of wealth and taste are now convinced that they can adorn their homes as well by going to Springfield as to Boston or New York. Mr. Burns's artist visits the homes of his patrons and makes special designs adapted to each house, thereby fitting up the windows in a much neater manner than by a general selection of goods.

UPHOLSTERY GOODS.—Mr. George has also charge of the Upholstery Department. Extra pains are taken to upholster in a lasting manner. No excelsior is used, but only the very best of material enters into this work. People are finding out that the very superior upholstery done at Burns's is a new thing in Springfield, and they show that they can appreciate such work by the great demand for it which is coming in to Burns's warerooms. Nothing better is made in Boston or New York.

MAHOGANY CHAMBER SETS.—Just now there is a sharp demand for elegant chamber sets wrought in mahogany. Burns has at all times these most beautiful sets, fresh from the factories at Grand Rapids, Michigan. Many of your readers can see these sets in Holyoke, Northampton, Easthampten, Westfield, Wilbraham and other places, where owners have bought them at Burns's.

OTTOMAN BED LOUNGES.—This elegant parlor ornament becomes at night a most comfortable bed. The lounge is by far the finest article of the kind in the market. It is upholstered in a very ornamental style and made of the best materials. A large sale of them causes Mr. Burns to keep a full stock.

HOW HAS THIS GREAT ENTERPRISE BEEN BUILT UP?—When Mr. Burns began four years ago he determined to keep the best furniture store in Western Mass. He put quality before quantity, though in the latter he excels all others in that city. He believed in giving every man his money's worth. Every job was well done, because he knew it paid to do it well. He bought the best goods, employed the best workmen and sold at moderate advance on cost. To-day he leads the trade in this section in all classes of furniture. People will be cordially received and shown about the warehouse, even if they are not ready to buy. 4w13

IS THE

STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE

Facts, say the professors, are obtained by the concurrent opinion of the largest number of best able to judge. This principle applies to the Steinway pianos, as the largest number of people pronounce them to be the best, and the firm is doing the largest volume of business of any piano-making concern in the world. Purchasers, by paying $75, $100, $150, $200 or $300 more, according to the style, for them than for any other pianos; dealers, by comparing every other piano with them; makers, by putting their pianos below them in price, and then claiming that they are pretty nearly as good, because they "have some of Steinway's workmen," or "foreman from Steinway's," or "use Steinway's scales," etc., all proclaim that

THE STEINWAY

IS THE ACKNOWEDGED STANDARD PIANO,

Not only in this country, but also in Europe it stands as far ahead of all other pianos as it does in America.

This fact deing established that the Steinway is the best, of course the next best is that which is nearest like it, which purchasers can decide for themselves by listening and comparing with the standard.

MR. WM. WESTFALL,

OF DUCHESS CO., N. Y., 80 YEARS OF AGE, SUFFERED CONTINUALLY FOR MANY YEARS FROM STONE in the BLADDER.

Great age and painful disease are a sad combination. Yet Mr. William Westfall, formerly of Rock City, Duchess Co., N. Y., now of Washington Hollow, in the same county, came to the office of Dr. David Kennedy, the eminent physician and surgeon of Rondout, N. Y., some time since, in a condition to excite the sympathy of the most cold-blooded and hard-hearted person in the word. We say he came—he was, rather, carried to the Doctor's office, for he was totally helpless, and bore the weight of 80 years besides. He had suffered long from Retention of Urine, and had all the symptoms of an aggravated case of calculus formations in the bladder. The usual instrumental examination revealed the presence in the bladder of a urinary calculus of uncommon size. Dr. Kennedy frankly told Mr. Westfall that, owing to his age and debility, an operation was out of the question, but that he could, by the prescription of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," together with local treatment, make him comfortable and leave him to live out all his days. The outcome of this was that the patient enjoys good health to this day.

THE REASONS WHY

Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is being extensively used by our people are as follows: It is a combination of vegetable alteratives. It is pleasant to the taste, adapted to both sexes and all ages, is effective in affording immediate relief in all cases of Kidney Troubles, Liver Complaints, Constipation of the Bowels and derangements peculiar to women. At the same time it purifies the blood, thus giving tone and strength to the system debilitated by disease or age. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists. 4w13

Sunset Gates Ajar.

To-night as I sat at my window,
When the west was all agleam
With that strange and wonderful splendor
That is fleeting as a dream,
I thought that the hands of the angels
Had flung open heaven's gateway wide;
And I caught a glimpse of the glory
From the hills on the other side.

Is it not a beautiful fancy,
This sunset thought of mine,
That the gates of heaven are always
Flung open at day's decline?
That those whose day is ended,
Of earthly woes and ills,
May pass to the morning sunshine
That dwells on the heavenly hills?

When for me the sunset gateway
Shall at day's decline unclose,
And I pass in through its portals
To that long and sweet repose,
I know that I shall remember
In that city so fair and far
My strange and beautiful fancy
Of the sunset gates ajar.

Perhaps while I sat there dreaming
Of the gateway in the west,
Some poor soul went through its portals
To a long and endless rest;
Passed through the sunset gateway
To that "city paved with gold"—
Passed into the new life's gladness
To be no longer old.

DORA DEAN.

She was twenty-two, and the prefix which would indicate her a married woman was still wanting in her name. Yet there was no line of disappointment about Dora Dean's mouth; no troubled expression in her gray eyes. Yet she looked a woman to love and to be loved. She was not beautiful, but people had always called her a pretty girl. They called her so still (so youthful was the pretty figure and a mobile face), until they stopped to reckon on their fingers and found the term "woman" to be more appropriate. There was about her, too, a certain distinctive charm—a something that made strangers turn again as she passed them by, for a second glance. She was neither belle nor beauty. She could have married many times, but,—perhaps, because she felt that love was one of the essentials lacking, perhaps because the ideal was not attained—she remained Dora Dean still. Thus gossip reasoned. Try as they would, they could find no early disappointment, no hidden romance in all of the years she had lived among them. Yet peeping over her shoulder as is our privilege, noting the delicate flush upon her cheek, the light in her eye, the trembling of her little hand that holds a letter, written in bold characters, they might have seized upon a clue we are too generous to fasten to or follow. The words she perused were these:

'The fever has broken out quite hotly with us, and I am anxious that Clara should breathe the fresh air. May I drive her out to-night and leave her for a fortnight? My messenger will wait your answer. DONALD RAY.'

'Of course she might come,' thought Miss Dean.

Dear little Clara! Dr. Ray was her guardian. She had been left to his care when a little girl of three years. She must be eighteen now. For six years she had been at school. Now she had returned to her guardian's home to remain until some one stole her away to grace another. But she was still a child. That was but a remote possibility for the distant future.

Donald Ray was a physician in the great city in one of whose suburbs was Dora Dean's beautiful home. How many years she had known him! He had even come to her first in that long ago time to tell her of the story of the child confided to his care.

She had been but seventeen herself, then, he six years her senior. They had been friends always, but lately she had seen more of him than his usual wont. He had talked to her of Clara's home-coming—of the plans he had matured for her amusement—of the pleasure his mother would experience in having her bright, young presence constantly near; and she had listened, as she always listened, with a beating heart and a fleeting color. But it had never betrayed her secret, even to him. She had scarcely acknowledged it to herself. She only knew that other men might come and go, but all were powerless, even by the most passionate protestations of devotion, to awaken that called forth by his simplest word.

But lately he had been different. There had been a light in his eyes like that within her own—the suppressed excitement in her manner tallied in variance with his usual calm. And now from his legion of friends he had chosen her home where his ward might be a guest.

Her thoughts were very busy as she made her preparations to receive her visitor. With her own hand she gathered and arranged the flowers that were to welcome her in the pretty room she had assigned her, adjoining her own.

In the dusk of the evening the sound of wheels announced her coming.

'Dear Miss Dora!' exclaimed a sweet, girlish voice, as some one sprang from the carriage, before the doctor could alight to assist her. "It is all nonsense, Donald's sending me away from home! but so long as he insisted upon it, I am so glad it is here! We shall have such nice times together—that is if you have not forgotten me."

And she impulsively threw her arms about the elder woman's neck.

There was a charm—a winsomeness—about her impossible to resist. Dora Dean felt her heart go out towards her anew, as it had done when, a tiny golden-haired child, she had climbed upon her knee and fallen asleep cradled in her arms.

Not until they had all gone in together into the lighted drawing room, did she discover how fully the child's promise of rare beauty had redeemed itself.

But the light was less merciful elsewhere. It showed the physician's face pale and careworn, and bearing traces of over-work and lack of sleep. Dora found a moment during Clara's gay prattle to lay her hand upon his sleeve and whisper, "I fear you forget that, in your care of others, you are not looking well?"

"Nonsense!" he exclaimed. "The idea of a doctor not being able to take care of himself. It is like the cook allowing himself to starve. You would almost persuade my patients to lose confidence in me, which reminds me I am losing precious time, and must be off. A thousand thanks for receiving the child. I shall see you as often as is possible and shall have a double inducement in coming."

Was it all a fancy that his voice was lower as he uttered the last sentence? and was it unconscious, the pressure of the little hand of his hostess as it lay for a moment within his own?

However that might be, Dora's heart felt strangely light as she listened to the echo of the retreating wheels of Dr. Ray's carriage.

Clara had been her guest a fortnight, during which time Dr. Ray had fulfilled his promise of devoting to them all his spare moments; but they were few. The fever was increasing rather than abating. Miss Dean bade fair to have her guest for a long visit.

"But you are not tired of me, are you?" Clara asked when her guardian hinted something of this.

"No, indeed," she answered with a bright smile. The question is—what shall I do without you?"

The three were standing together when she thus spoke, but as she finished Donald Ray leaned over and in a low tone said, so that only her ear caught the words:

"To-morrow when I come I want to see you alone. I have something to say to you."

Why—why could she not hide the blood which so deeply dyed her cheeks as she bowed her assent? In all these years he had never spoken before. Was it that Clara's bright presence had renewed her own youth, until in his eyes she had recovered it? Surely she might dwell a moment on the sweet hope of which this wish may form the threshold!

The next day she awaited him in her own little morning room. She had given orders to the servants that he should be admitted there. Clara she had sent out for a drive.

Her heart beat fast to suffocation, as at length she heard his step. He crossed the room to where she stood, and took both her hands in his.

"Dora," he began, "I have come to you to confide to you the secret of my life. I know that you are frank and true. Tell me then and tell me honestly—am I too old to love and to be loved?"

Be still glad heart—be still! How long had her secret been acknowledged, even to herself? It broke its bonds now and burst upon her in a rapturous vision, which showed the past gray and sombre, the future in a brilliance which blinded her.

"Too old!" she said in tones that trembled, spite of her effort to control them. "No—a thousand times no!"

He raised her hands to his lips and kissed them. It was the first time his kiss had touched them.

"My friend," he whispered low, "you have guessed my secret, have you not? You have seen it! How could I hope to hide it, except from her? She suspects nothing. Tell me how I shall approach her that I may not startle her? She is yet but a child. You are a woman, Dora, help me!"

Was she still standing upright? About her were the crushed ruins of her castle which sixty seconds before towered to the clouds. The noise of the falling fragments had stunned her. Had he not heard? The dust that had arisen therefrom blinded her. Could he not see?

"You are a woman Dora, help me!"

These were the words ringing in her ears. Oh, God! had she not greater need of help?

"You love Clara?"

How calm and quiet her voice sounded even to herself.

"Love her! Ah, Dora, you who have never loved can little guess how much."

She laughed then. Something in the words amused her. Something that showed her how well she had kept her secret—an old maid's secret.

"Talk to her," he went on. "Tell me if she feels, if she ever will feel for me, that for which I long."

"Nay, speak to her yourself," she answered. "She scarcely can deny you pleading your own cause."

"You think so? Then I will come to-morrow. Good-bye. God bless you!"

At last she was alone. The knowledge came with a long sigh of relief, as some hours later the "good-nights" had been said and Dora could face the misery the morning had brought her. How long—how very long ago it seemed! She drew a chair beside the open window and sank into it heavily.

At that moment a faint tap sounded on the door, and a golden crowned head pushed itself through the space where it was held ajar.

"Please let me come in, dear Miss Dora. I want to talk with you."

Then, without waiting for further permission, a little white-robed figure glided in and sank on the stool by her feet.

The moonlight showed the fair upturned face, and it was only the shadow resting on her own soul that made the older woman fancy that a graver expression was upon it than its wont.

"I—I have something to tell you, Miss Dora," the girl went on, after a little pause. "I love you so much that I would like for you to hear it first—am I still a child? And do you think that children, as Donald calls me, can love?"

"You love, then?"

Almost breathlessly she put the question. Her own pain was swallowed up in the joy, that, at least to Donald, his love would not be returned to him as bitter as Dead Sea fruit.

"Yes, love," said Clara. "It was such a funny accident our meeting. It was two years ago. His regiment was stationed at the town where I was going to school. He is only a lieutenant, but he is so brave, so handsome! My own father was an officer, you know. I think remembering that made me first care for him."

Then Miss Dean recovered her breath.

"A lieutenant! Who is this man of whom you are talking?"

"His name is Harry Linden. He will be here next week. He is coming down to ask my guardian's formal consent to marry me. Oh, Miss Dora! Do you think he will refuse or be angry? He is so old, perhaps he has forgotten that he once was young."

Bitterest mockery of fate! "So old!" she said, and not yet had forty years crowned his brow.

Once again she met Donald Ray alone, as he came next to plead his cause. He listened with a white, drawn face as she informed him, she meanwhile sparing him, in the telling, all she could.

In her tender pity for his wound she forgot that hers, too, bled.

"You are very kind," he said, when she had finished. "I—I am glad that she never suspected the truth. I will not see her to-day. To-morrow I will be stronger."

He turned, but as he gained the threshold he tottered, strove to recover himself, but fainted, and fell forward on the floor.

The fever was upon him, already in his veins. The shock had brought the hidden enemy to light. Tossing in delirium for many weeks, Dora learned how wholly the man's heart had fastened itself upon the one hope which so cruelly failed him. For a time it seemed as though it had sapped the foundation of his life; but it proved not so.

There came a day when, opening his eyes, he recognized the nurse whose gentle touch had soothed all his fever's fancy hours. Slowly he regained his strength, but it seemed as though his returning health brought with it a vision.

Clara's acknowledged lover was with them now. They who had welcomed him for her sake soon did so for his own. Seeing them together none could wonder that each had chosen the other, but how the sight must pain the other man.

With all her ingenuity Dora strove to keep it away from him, until he said to her one day:

"My wound has been cauterized; it no longer hurts."

He was brave and hid it, she told herself. Did she not know that such wounds never healed?

Thus the weeks rolled on until it came the time for Clara's wedding. She had returned to her guardian's home, which she was now to leave forever.

It was the evening before her marriage when Dora, sitting alone, heard the step she had learned to know so well.

As he had done once before, entering the room where she sat, he came straight towards her, taking both her hands in his.

"Dora," he said, "do you remember that you once told me that, pleading my own cause, I could not be denied? Will you make good your words? Must I be punished for the long years I have been blind? I love you dear! I want you for my own—my wife! Will you forgive the infatuation which misled me from the real cry of my heart, and now answers it? It is very empty; will you fill it?"

She looked up into his face. Was it pity—pity which prompted the words for which her hungry heart had thirsted all these years? No, no! It was the light of love, and it burned for her. She knew it as she knew that it should light her footsteps down into the valley and shadow of eternity; and so knowing she gave him the promise that he asked.

SUGGESTIONS.

Don't live in the back end of your house. The boys will prefer the saloon to the kitchen. Don't be afraid of the coal bill or wood pile. It is cheaper to have a warm parlor than to pay liquor bills. Put books and papers upon the table instead of wine and cider. Clear brains will honor the family record more than drunkards. Marry into the Cheerable family and keep clear of the Grumblers. Pull the latch string in for gossip, and hang it out for the poor, that yours may be a house of mercy. In a dying world don't spend much time on ruffles and killing flies. Your children's bodies are more valuable than fine clothes, lace curtains and Brussels carpets, and their souls are of eternal worth. Don't starve to-day, to riot to-morrow; don't hoard and scrimp for years that you may be generous in your grave. Be your own almoner, and see your children's happiness while they are still under the parental roof. Better have a Sunday home service than break your neighbor's Sabbath by visiting and dining that day. Money laid out in song books, organs, music teachers and tuners, pays compound interest; bringing health to the body, quiet minds, balm to minds, and makes the home an ante-chamber to the choir above.

Put your home into close communication with the church, the school, and keep open houses for every good agency that will make home life sweeter, and give the good control of your children's character.

The great things you are going to do for them in the future you had better swap off for the daily little attentions which feed the affections and mould the character, and bind them to you by heart chords that never break.

WHERE HE SAW HER.

Just before a Western bound train left the Union depot, yesterday morning, a masher with his little grip-sack slid around to a woman standing near the ticket office, and remarked:

'Excuse me, but can I be of any assistance in purchasing your ticket?'

'No, sir,' was the short reply.

'Beg pardon, but I shall be glad to see that your trunk is properly checked,' he continued.

'It has been checked, sir."

'Yes—ahem—you go West, I presume?'

'I do.'

'Going as far as Chicago?'

'Yes, sir.'

'Ah—yes—to Chicago. I also take the train for Chicago. Beg your pardon, but didn't I meet you in Buffalo last fall?'

'No, sir.'

'Ah! Then it was in Syracuse?'

'No, sir.'

'No? I wonder where I have seen you before.'

'You saw me enter the depot about five minutes ago with my husband, I presume.'

'Your husband?'

'Yes, sir; and if you'll only stay around here three minutes longer you will make the fifth of your kind that he has turned over to the coroner this month.'

Some mashers would have made a run for it, but this one didn't. He went off on the gallop, and as he wanted to go light he left his grip-sack and a ton of brass behind him. —Free Press.

Swapped Hearts.

I prithee send me back my heart,
Since I cannot have thine;
For if from yours you will not part
Why, then, shouldst thou have mine?'

Yet now I think on't, let it lie;
To find it were in vain,
For thou'st a thief in either eye
Would steal it back again.

Why should two hearts in one breast lie,
And yet not lodge together?
O Love? where is thy sympathy,
If thus our breasts thou sever?

But love is such a mystery,
I cannot find it out;
For when I think I'm best resolved
I then am in my doubt.

Then farewell care, and farewell woe,
I will no longer pine;
For I'll believe I have her heart
As much as she has mine.

A COMPETENT COSTUMER.

'Is the gentleman that knows everything in?' stammered a vision of golden hair and sea blue eyes, as she stood timidly beside the managing editor's desk yesterday afternoon.

'Everything about what?' asked the edltor, clawing around under his desk for his shoes and trying to hide his stocking feet under him. 'Upon what particular branch do you seek information?'

'I don't exactly know what to do,' pouted the strawberry lips. 'Pa says I can only have one dress this spring, and I don't know how to make it up. I thought the gentleman who answers questions could tell me.'

'H'm!' muttered the managing editor. 'He has gone up in Maine to find out why geese always walk in single file. An 'Anxious Inquirer' wants to know. What kind of a dress had you thought of getting?'

'That's what I want to know. I want something that will look well with terra cotta gloves.'

'Yes, yes,' murmured the editor. 'Then you should get one of those green things with beads that turn all sorts of colors, and some fringe and fixings of that kind.'

'Would you have it cut princess or wear it with a polonaise?' she inquired, looking at him searchingly.

'You—you might have it princess around the neck and a row of polonaises at the bottom,' suggested the editor. 'That's going to be very fashionable, and a couple of hip pockets would set it off royally.'

'I don't know,' murmured the beauty. 'I haven't seen any of that style. Do you know whether panniers are worn bouffant this season, or whether the skirt is tight?'

'O, certainly!' replied the editor. 'They are made with all the bouffants you can get on them. Some have even sixteen button bouffants, and there was a lady in here yesterday who had a pannier that came clean up to her neck. I should have it pretty bouffant if it was my dress.'

'Well,' stammered the blushing blossom, 'would you box plait the skirt or shirr it?'

'Shirr it, by all means!' exclaimed the editor. 'Shirr it straight up and down, and fasten it with those loops of black tape.'

'You mean frogs?' asked the beauty.

'No, no. These big loops that slip over two buttons. That sets off the shirrs and gives a sort of tout to the ensemble,' and the editor leaned back and smiled superior.

Don't you think revers of a lighter shade would look pretty?' she inquired.

'They will do to fix up the back, but I would not put them on the front,' answered the editor sagely. 'Revers are very well to trim a hat with, but they don't set off a dress front.'

'How would you have the corsage?'

'I wouldn't have any at all. You would look much better without one.'

'Sir!' she exclaimed, rising.

'Oh, if you insist, you might have a small one, certainly not over three inches long, for short dresses are the style now.'

'You—you don't seem to understand,' she commenced.

'Oh, don't I?' he retorted. 'That's what I am here for. I think there is nothing so lamentable as to see a young lady dragging her corsage through the mud and dust. Still, if you want one, you should have it so you can take it off when you go on the street and only wear it at home. They are hard to handle, and not one woman in a hundred can kick her corsage gracefully.'

'I am very much obliged to you,' she murmured. 'You are very good, I am sure.'

'Don't mention it,' replied the editor, politely, 'I think when you get it shirred and revered and polonaised and princessed, you'll like it very much. You might get a sash and some big buttons to put on behind, or if you would like another style better, you might trim the whole front with bouffants and wear the panniers for a hat.'

'O, thank you, sir!' exclaimed the blushing bud, as she scuttled down the stairs.

'Swipes!' roared the managing editor, with a complacent smile and glance of approval at himself in the glass, 'Swipes, you may tell the foreman to send me a proof of the Fashion Notes as soon as they come in. I have observed that a great many errors have crept in lately.'—Brooklyn Eagle.

THE corner stone of the Garfield Memorial Church in Washington was laid last Sunday. The President and other public men were noticeable chiefly by their absence from the service.

THE Malley trial at New Haven came to an end last week Friday with the expected verdict of acquittal, and the prisoners were set at liberty. THERE seems to be a likelihood that Congress will authorize a 2 per cent loan of $200,000,000, for the refunding of a like amount of 5 per cents. The House is assured that such a bond will be taken by the banks to secure their circulation. The placing of a 2 per cent loan at par would clearly put our national credit ahead of that of any other nation in the world.

IT must make the nations of the Old World almost green with envy to see the way Uncle Sam is making money and paying up his debts. The interest-bearing debt was last year reduced $175,757,000, and now stands at $1,463,000,000, a reduction of $918,000,000 from its highest point. The interest charge was $71,000,000 last year, but will not reach $57,000,000 this year.

FOR the first time in thirty years, with but one exception, the post office department has been self-sustaining the past year, thanks to the reforms instituted by Postmaster General James, and a surplus of a million and a half is counted upon for the coming year. But for all this Postmaster General Howe is opposed to a reduction of letter postage to two cents, for fear of a deficit. This does not necessarily follow, for there would be a large increase of correspondence, but even if there should be a shortage it could be made good from the large government surplus, and it would be a much better use of the money than is now made of much of it by Congress.

There has been a remarkable growth in the consumption of fruit within the past few years, as shown by the sales of our local merchants. About 15,000 boxes of strawberries, for instance, have passed through the hands of our dealers this season, where a few years ago there were but a very few sold; and the sale of other fruits and berries has increased in like proportion. Oyster lovers must make up their minds to pay at least 50 cents a quart for their bivalves the coming season. The chief sources of supply at the North will all give a short yield this year. At New Haven harbor fully one-half of the oysters planted last Spring are dead, and large quantities have also died in the Providence river, which will materially shorten the supply. The cause of the strange fatality is unknown, though the long-continued cold weather is thought to have something to do with it. Whatever the cause may be, the small supply is a fact, and prices will inevitably rule high.

Gardner was authorized to apply the property of his ward, Nettie Etta Kinne, to her maintenance.

The district court had three drunks to deal with the morning after the Fourth, Timothy Lynes of Brimfield, and Timothy and Michael Donahue of Monson. The latter paid $10 and costs, this being his third conviction within a year. The others settled for $1 and costs each. Geo. W. Green, an Englishman, was up for disturbing the peace, and in default of $20 and costs, and sureties to keep the peace, he was sent to jail. A tramp was before the court on Thursday morning charged with breaking into the Boston & Albany tank house, but there was not sufficient evidence to hold him, and he was let off. James Ryan, the boy who was arrested for placing obstructions on the Ware River Railroad track, was discharged, as it was found that the crime was committed in Ware, outside the jurisdiction of this court. Marble Ferrey, a young man charged with setting fire to Mr. Friday's barn in Silver Street, had a hearing before the court yesterday.

INDEPENDENCE DAY IN PALMER.

The Fourth passed off uneventfully, as far as the local observance of the day was concerned. "Young America" was of course "up and doing" at an early hour, and soon after midnight the church bells began to ring, and a big bonfire was lighted on Main street, while fire crackers and fish horns added their sleep-destroying racket to the general din. Through the day the streets were almost as quiet as if it were Sunday. In the afternoon from 300 to 400 people assembled on the park to see the horse races, and were treated to some unusually good trotting. In the 2.34 class Tanner's "Hersey" and Burdick's "Happy Jim" were a very close match, and came around neck and neck in almost every heat: It is reported that one heat was made in about 2.35, although the official time was put at a higher figure. There was also some good trotting in the 2.50 class. The scores were as follows:

2.34 CLASS.

A. H. Tanner, Monson, br. s. "Hersey,"	1 1 3 1
G. W. Burdick, " br. g. "Happy Jim,"	2 3 1 2
Chas. Lincoln, Warren, br. s. "Andrew Jackson,"	3 2 2 3

Time—2.40½. 2.41, 2.45, 2.41.

2.50 CLASS.

A. H. Morse, Brookfield, b.m. "Blanche,"	1 1 0 1
E. F. Bass, Palmer, b. s. "Deceit,"	2 2 0 2
W. H. Hellyar, Palmer, bu. s. "Charlie,"	3 3 0 3
C. E. Caswell, Holyoke, br. m. "Topsy,"	5 4 0 4
C. H. Crouch, Warren, ch. g. "Syphon,"	4 5 0 5

Time—2.59¼, 2.50, ——, 2.49¾.

The judges in the races were C. H. Robbins of Monson, F. J. Wassum and R. L. Goddard of Palmer. The race for "green" horses did not come off, for lack of entries, but the time was well taken up and all were satisfied.

In the evening there was a small display of fireworks on the hill southwest of the village, the citizens of the place having "chipped in" for a $100 collection. The rockets and large pieces showed off well, but the distance was too great for the smaller ones to be distinguished, and many thought the display as a whole did not amount to much. But then, $100 don't go far in pyrotechnics.

The children at the State Primary School had an enjoyable day, with games, races, etc., as announced last week, but on account of the lowery weather the display of fireworks was postponed to Thursday evening, when it came off in good shape.

THREE RIVERS.

John Rivers has sold a lot to Ansel C. Shaw, near the store of Trudeau & Rivers, for $500.

One of our citizens threw some wine dregs into his hog pen the other day, and the porker swallowed them with a relish, becoming so limber that he could not stand, but lay around as drunk as any human frequenter of the gutter.

BRIMFIELD.

There are in town 217 horses, 778 cows, and 244 sheep. Last year the respective figures were 228, 800 and 175.

The Fourth was observed in much the usual manner, being ushered in by the ringing of bells, and the usual nuisance of fire-crackers, torpedoes, etc., and the firing of cannon. The latter, however, from an overcharge or old age, burst during the forenoon, and as no one was injured there was general rejoicing over the event. John F. Converse gave a fine display of fireworks in front of his residence in the evening.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

Owing to the rain the picnic on the Fourth given by the Land League was adjourned to the hall, where dancing was the chief amusement. The oration of Hon. James Dempsey, of Middletown, Ct., was only partly delivered, by reason of the rain. The running match came off about 5 p. m. The first prize, a gold medal and championship of Western Massachusetts, was won by Kain of Thorndike, time 17 seconds; second prize, a silver medal, by Taylor of Jenksville, time about 17¼ sec.; third prize, $10 in money, was won by J. H. Losee of the Orchard, time 17½ sec. The distance was 150 yards.

WARREN.

A woman walking on the track to West Brookfield met the 5.30 train, and in an attempt to step aside lost her balance and was hit by the car steps and her shoulder broken.

The Fourth was ushered in with the usual amount of noise with cannons and fire-crackers. At five o'clock the "horribles" had their procession, which lasted till seven. They were well gotten up, and reflected much credit on those who were participants. Among the most noticeable was "Jumbo," if not the original, a good fac-simile, who attracted much notice and moved with stately tread. A collation was given on the park, and drew large crowds. In the evening there was a fine display of fireworks. A union picnic in Sibley's grove and a picnic at West Warren gave an opportunity for all to find some place of amusement.

WALES.

The Wales Savings Bank has declared a 2¼ per cent semi-annual dividend.

Byron Thayer had a thumb nearly torn off last Saturday by the extractor in the Dell mill.

The rainy weather has compelled the farmers to let their grass stand, and it has grown wonderfully this week.

The building of the new school house near the Hegan mill has been awarded to David Shepardson, Jr., his being the lowest bid.

The mill help have had a week's rest and plenty of time to celebrate. Most of them, however, celebrated out of town, so it was very quiet here.

Ida Janes died of pneumonia on Wednesday, aged 20 years, after an illness of only six days. She was daughter of Edwin Janes, who died two weeks before so suddenly.

THORNDIKE.

By request, a sermon will be preached Sunday morning at the Congregational church of a political nature.

Mrs. Martha Linson was struck by the 1.15 train at the upper crossing in this village Thursday afternoon, and almost instantly killed.

Herman Kendall recently took a party from this village, with their friends, to Steerage Rock, in Brimfield, where a picnic was held and the time otherwise pleasantly spent.

Ella Smith, a six-years-old daughter of Joseph Smith, was nearly drowned on the Fourth in a spring in front of Agent Wilson's house. When found she was nearly dead, but was finally resuscitated.

The Fourth was very quietly celebrated in this village. There were a few local picnics on Commercial street, where were a plenty of luxuries and good speaking. There were, as usual, a few individuals who celebrated for the public amusement.

BONDSVILLE.

The Boston Duck Cornet Band gave a picnic on the Fourth. About 500 persons were present, and there was dancing, sack racing, etc. Miss Kate Dwyer won the silver cup given to the best lady dancer, and John Carmody the prize in the sack race. Dumas's orchestra dispensed harmonious strains for the dancers.

Some of the "orderly gentlemen" for which this village is justly celebrated observed the 4th in rather a novel manner, by exploding cannon crackers inside several of the street lamps, shattering the glass into a thousand atoms. It is about time that we had an officer in this part of the town to look after these respectable youths.

A correspondent writes: "One of the annoyances of our village is the congregating of a large crowd of people at the depot on the arrival of the evening train. Most of these are young women (we can scarcely call them ladies) who sit around and grin at travelers and peer into the cars as though they expected to see Jumbo or some such curiosity. We have often wondered if it would not be better for these girls to stay at home and learn something useful, such as making decent bread for their future husbands, than to be hanging around depots or promenading the streets with fellows who are neither choice in their language nor morals. We hope parents will consider this question before it brings sorrow to their gray hairs."

MONSON.

Thomas Bogan has bought Joseph Williams's farm for $1500.

Alfred Wallace raised his barn on the 4th, having an old-fashioned raising.

The sale of James Pendergast's farm and the grass standing comes off this (Saturday) afternoon at 1 o'clock.

Five persons were received to the Congregational church last Sabbath, making thirty-nine received within a year.

The 4th was ushered in by ringing of bells and the usual amount of fire-crackers. The picnic parties had enjoyable times, and the Catholic society had a grand gala day in Carpenter's grove.

The frames to churches are generally of the best of materials, especially the sills and lower timbers, but the sleepers of a certain church in Hampden county were considerably weakened last Sabbath when the pastor stopped in the middle of his sermon and requested his hearers to keep awake, as it was a cool day, and defer their naps to some hot, sultry day.

The rendering of "Pinafore" last week Thursday and Friday evenings by our local singers, who had been in training under Prof. Sherlock, reflected great credit upon both the Professor and the singers. Miss Emma Weller, soprano of the Universalist choir at Palmer, appeared as "Josephine," D. V. Jones of New Haven as "Ralph," Miss Ella Gould of Rockville as "Hebe," Prof. Sherlock as "Deadeye," and Mrs. Sherlock as "Buttercup." The soloists were good, and the choruses were given with a "vim" worthy of veteran actors.

A correspondent of the Boston Journal, who passed over the New London Northern road the other day, wrote as follows of our town: "We passed Monson, where good Mrs. Brown wrote:

'I love to steal awhile away,' molded the Christian character of her son, Rev. Dr. Brown, the foreign missionary, who brought Yung Wing to America, and was a link in the chain of events which has opened China to Western civilization. The academy over which Rev. Chas. Hammond presided with such conspicuous ability for so many years has taken a new lease of life, and seems entering on a new career of prosperous usefulness."

Mr. Prouty was thrown out, striking his face in the sand and gravel, and receiving some severe scratches, but he was able to go home alone.

The selectmen have issued notices to the landlords who own the buildings in which those convicted of illegal selling of liquors and keeping nuisances have done business, calling their attention to chapter 101, sections 9 and 10 of the Public Statutes, and requesting that the parties be ejected from the premises as soon as it can be legally done.

The ball game the 4th between the Clippers and Firemen was played at 10 o'clock, and was said to be the most interesting game in Ware this season. At the end of the seventh inning the score stood 12 to 7 in favor of the Firemen. The first part of the eighth inning, by skillful playing the Clippers added seven runs to their score, with only one man out, when the Firemen, owing to the exhaustion of their catcher, gave up the game, and it was decided by the umpire that owing to the refusal of the Firemen to play longer the Clippers had won, nine to nothing. There were about 600 present to witness the game. A second game between the same parties is expected one week from to-day.

Mr. Editor: — Some time since an article appeared in one of the daily papers protesting against the practice of nude bathing in the river, as being objectionable to parties using the steamer. Now we do not wish in the least to discourage the use of the steamer, nor boating, nor canoeing, and the river ought to be in such condition as not to shock the modesty of anyone who is thus recreating, but we feel that there should be some arrangement made whereby the boys, and men and women too, could take a bath when they wish, or indulge in a swim, for I consider no similar recreation more pleasant or profitable than these. Now there is no point in Muddy Brook concealed from the public view that is available, and the same may be said of the river below the mills, and all are not able to buy suits to swim in, consequently we suggest that some portion of the river be set apart for this practice, or a proper bath house made, and in this manner meet the requirements of all.

A SWIMMER.

The Glorious Fourth passed off in the most quiet and orderly manner of any in the remembrance of the "oldest inhabitant." It is reported that but three men were seen who had taken enough strong drink to show it, so there was not to be found in all the town a thoroughly drunken man, and consequently the lock-up had no occupants. The two principal picnics of the day were by the Land League in Eaton's grove, on the bank of the river, and that of the St. Jean Baptiste Societe in Coney's grove. Both were well attended, the first clearing for the League about $125, and the latter, including the dance at Firemen's Hall in the evening, netted about $100. The Good Templars, with delegates from adjoining towns, held a picnic in Hoyt's grove on the banks of Hardwick Pond. The Sunday school at Ware Center held their picnic in Brown's grove, and report a most enjoyable time. A party of about 75 of the neighbors met on the grounds of Aaron Smith, which were finely decorated for the occasion. Twenty Ware people were at Coldbrook Springs for the day, and many family and private gatherings were held in various parts of the town.

The assessors have completed their labors, and the taxes are turned over to D. P. Billings for collection. There are 1254 polls in town, against 1131 last year. Mr. Editor: — It seems as though the following quotations from your local contemporary of two weeks ago should be published in the STANDARD, that the better class of the community may see and hear what an influence is being exerted to offset those in favor of law and order which at present prevail. He says:

"Fines amounting to eleven dollars and costs for drunkenness and overdriving were cheerfully paid."

"The lock-up seems to be in use more than for years before. Is it possible we have more crime committed?"

"There has been more criminal business than for— * * * * * It is always easy enough to make arrests, and convictions generally follow; but we do not believe it will increase the reputation of the town for law and order."

The last quotation does not argue strongly for the legal ability of the author, who usually appears in court for the criminal, and it would seem that his green baize must be filled with bills against his clients, rather than with references and quotations from the higher courts, or else his clients are guilty, for he admits that convictions usually follow. The great difference in the use of the lock-up and the business of the court is simply the fact that some of the officers of the law are trying to do their duty, where in times past they did not. There are none so blind but can see, if they will, a great decrease in drunkenness and lawlessness within the past few months. It is also evident that young roughs from neighboring towns, with their pockets filled with bottles, are learning that this is not the place to come for a drunken debauch, to the annoyance of peaceable citizens.

Editor of Standard: — Many important facts which ought to be valuable to our loyal citizens for future use, have been developed as a result of the faithfulness of the present administration, and doubtless there are more to follow. We have learned now, as some other towns have before us, that no individual directly or indirectly profited by the sale of intoxicating liquors can be depended upon to enforce any law intended for the prosecution of those who violate its provisions regarding this miserable traffic. Is it too much to add that they can be depended upon to lend such obstructions to the working of the law as they may be able? If this was not clearly shown in at least one instance at the late trial at Music Hall, then many are sadly mistaken.

Again, hard seeking for office is conceded generally as a bad symytom—our business men as a rule would not leave their private interests, or those for the success of which they may be responsible, at the risk year after year of such management as came from the "ring rule" of such as that to which we have long been accustomed. Notwithstanding the advice we have had concerning the value to a community of a law which licenses and the evils of a law which prohibits, the importance of availing of license money to aid in supporting the poor, and much more in that line, we seem to have intrusted our affairs to safe hands, and it may appear that men reluctant to accept public office, and who accept it only when duty demands it, are the real rem edy we so much needed. We have been asked to believe that our affairs have heretofore been administered in the interest of all the people, as of course they should be, but in the long run the sympathy of the counsel will appear in the character of his clients. Our present officers have accomplished more than could have reasonably been expected in so short a time, in correcting evils and bold defiances of the law. That a greatly improved sentiment has already been created in town is clearly apparent. That the work done is generally approved none need doubt, and that in carrying on a reform work our officers will have the sympathy and support of all good citizens is certain.

Between the foot of Laverton Mountain and the Mississippi River was just enough space for a railroad, and it was utilized for that purpose; but the jar of the trains is supposed to have loosened the great mass of earth and rock, and for weeks the mountain moved very slowly into the river, shoving the tracks far out into the water, and only coming to a standstill after going about a hundred feet.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it, Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

Don't.

Don't always be wishing for what you can't get,
For wishes are vain that cannot be met.

Don't always be moping because you feel blue,
'Twill make you unhappy, and other folks, too.

Don't always be fretting if something goes wrong,
And not to your liking; it won't be for long;

For though the sky cloudy to-day may appear,
To-morrow it may be all sunny and clear.

Don't always be grumbling, because you have not
All that you wish for. Be content with your lot

Don't envy a man because he has wealth;
Though you have not riches, be thankful for health.

Don't despise any man because he is poor,
His heart may be truer than one who has more.

And he may be more willing to help his friends
Than he whom wealth and good fortune attends.

Don't miss any chance to do a good deed,
The naked to clothe, the hungry to feed;

For you never will be the loser thereby,
And may be rewarded—who knows—by and by.

GLASS SHINGLES.

A firm at Pittsburg have made a new departure in the use of glass, a patent having recently been grant to them for the manufacture of glass shingles. It is claimed for this material that it is more durable, stronger and more impervious to rain than slate or any other substance now used. The manufacture of these shingles will also be comparatively inexpensive, and they can be placed in position by any ordinary workman. They can be used for weather-boarding or siding houses and will be found especially serviceable for conservatories or hot-houses, as they can be made of transparent as well as opaque or translucent glass. These shingles have the advantage of slate in several particulars. In consequence of their shape they lie solid on the roof, and so can be used on comparatively flat roofs, and they will admit of persons walking on them without danger of fracture, a quality slate does not possess. They are interlocked, so as to leave no interstices between them, and one rivet holds eath pair of shingles, so they cannot be forced from their places by wind or other atmospheric disturbances. They are also made so as to have very little waste material.

It takes 200 slates each 8x12 inches to cover what is technically known as a "square" of roof, (a space measuring 10 feet either way,) but 150 of these shingles will suffice for the same space. Slates lap on the ends in the roofing, but the shingles lap on the sides. It has been proved by experiment in two adjacent houses, one covered with slates and the other with translucent glass, that the heat of a room near the roof in the former building will exceed that of one similarly situated in the latter, during the summer, glass being a non-conductor of heat. Houses with glass roofs are also warm in winter.

Glass is likewise a non-conductor of electricity, and houses with these roofs will need no lightning-conductors. Although the kind of glass intended to be used in these shingles is non-transparent, spaces for skylights may be filled with transparent glass. The exposed parts of the shingles are corrugated to increase strength and carry off the water. The firm will construct the shingles in handsome shapes, and they can be supplied in any color required or of no color if preferred. A roof with colored border and opalescent body is said to be very handsome.

Among the luxuriant and beautiful shrubs of Queensland is one known as the "stinging tree," which is exceedingly dangerous, and often fatal to life. It grows from two or three inches to ten or fifteen feet in height, and emits a very disagreeable smell. It is also easily distinguished by the peculiar shape of its leaves. "Sometimes," says a traveler, "while shooting turkeys in the scrubs, I have entirely forgotten the stinging tree till warned of its close proximity by its smell, and have often found myself in a little forest of them. I was only once stung, and that very lightly. Its effects are curious; it leaves no mark, but the pain is maddening; and for months afterward the part when touched is tender in rainy weather, or when it gets wet in washing, etc. I have seen a man who treats ordinary pain lightly, roll on the ground in agony after being stung, and I have known a horse so completely mad after getting into a grove of the trees that he rushed open mouthed at every one who approached him, and had to be shot. Dogs, when stung, will rush about whining piteously, biting pieces from the affected part."

The high price of living is felt as much in Canada as here. Meat has risen 25 per cent, and potatoes are far too costly for people of small means. A writer in a Toronto paper estimates that a dollar will not buy what fifty cents bought in 1878.

Portsmouth, N. H., has in its harbor a serious obstruction to navigation in "Pull-and-be-damned Point," which the government is to remove. Such a profane hindrance to navigation ought surely to be taken away.

What we call life is a journey to death, and what we call death is a passport to life. True wisdom thanks death for what he takes, and still more for what he brings.

Insults are like counterfeit money. We cannot prevent their being offered, but we are not obliged to take them.

Sweet Evelina, from the suffocating embrace of her lover, cried out: 'Give me liberty or give me breath.'

The mind without cultivation can never produce good fruit.

Impure water, unhealthy climate, unripe fruit unwholsome food, malaria, and a thousand little ills are nothing to those fortified by the use of Sanford's Ginger, "the delicious." j

Where pangs the mortal flesh assail,
And give a bitterness to life,
Making the cheek with anguish pale,
Amid the fierce internal strife;
Then Sanford's Ginger soothes the pain,
And smiling health looks up again. j

VARIOUS CAUSES—

Advancing years, care, sickness, disappointment, and hereditary predisposition—all operate to turn the hair gray, and either of them inclines it to shed prematurely. Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore faded or gray, light or red hair to a rich brown or deep black, as may be desired. It softens and cleanses the scalp, giving it a healthy action. It removes and cures dandruff and humors. By its use falling hair is checke , and a new growth will be produced in all c ses where the follices are not destroyed or the glands decayed. Its effects are beautifully shown on brashy, weak, or sickly hair, on which a few applications will produce the gloss and freshness of youth. Harmless and sure in its results, it is incomparable as a dressing, and is especially valued for the soft lustre and richness of tone it imparts.

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR is colorless; contains neither oil nor dye; and will not soil white cambric; yet it lasts long on the hair, and keeps it fresh and vigorous, imparting an agreeable perfume.

For sale by all druggists. 3

PIANO CHAIR.

TEACHERS, SCHOLARS and FINISHED AMATEUR AND PROFESSIONAL PLAYERS WILL ALIKE WELCOME IT.

The practice of sitting at a piano or organ practising for hours together, without a support for the back, is tiresome in the extreme, as every player knows; and, giving way to the tired feeling, very many, especially young persons, attempt to rest or relieve themselves by assuming a position which is not only ungraceful, but unnatural and unhealthy, and are often permanently injured thereby. To rest the back, it is not always necessary to incline the body to the rear. The body may lean forward, but if there is something against which the back may be pressed, it affords a sense of support, a feeling of ease which can be obtained in no other way, and really forms a true rest. The ordinary piano stool is not a comfortable seat under any circumstances, yet no material improvement was made upon the original design until this Back Piano Chair was invented. Although this Chair has been before the public but a short time, it has already attracted marked attention, and has gained the highest approval of all who have tested it. We are confident that it will fully meet the needs of thousands who have long been hoping and anxiously looking for some such improvement.

Price, plain, $5.00; plush, $6.00;
With adjustable back, $1.00 extra.

A SPRINGFIELD

ENTERPRISE.

It is no longer necessary to go to Boston or New York for fine Furniture, since a first-class Furniture Warehouse has been established in Springfield. D. Burns, at 409 Main street, has made a success of keeping a fine quality of Furniture, and people are finding it out.

LACE AND MADRAS CURTAINS, DRAPERIES, LAMBREQUINS, ETC.—This season Mr. Burns has introduced a superior stock of Lace and Madras Curtains, Lambrequins and Draperies. He secured the invaluable aid of Benjamin George, a first-class workman and artist from the noted house of H. A. Turner of Boston. By his skill and taste a very large increase of business in this department has been realized. This marked success arises from the fact that people of wealth and taste are now convinced that they can adorn their homes as well by going to Springfield as to Boston or New York. Mr. Burns's artist visits the homes of his patrons and makes special designs adapted to each house, thereby fitting up the windows in a much neater manner than by a general selection of goods.

UPHOLSTERY GOODS.—Mr. George has also charge of the Upholstery Department. Extra pains are taken to upholster in a lasting manner. No excelsior is used, but only the very best of material enters into this work. People are finding out that the very superior upholstery done at Burns's is a new thing in Springfield, and they show that they can appreciate such work by the great demand for it which is coming in to Burns's warerooms. Nothing better is made in Boston or New York.

MAHOGANY CHAMBER SETS.—Just now there is a sharp demand for elegant chamber sets wrought in mahogany. Burns has at all times these most beautiful sets, fresh from the factories at Grand Rapids, Michigan. Many of your readers can see these sets in Holyoke, Northampton, Easthampten, Westfield, Wilbraham and other places, where owners have bought them at Burns's.

OTTOMAN BED LOUNGES.—This elegant parlor ornament becomes at night a most comfortable bed. The lounge is by far the finest article of the kind in the market. It is upholstered in a very ornamental style and made of the best materials. A large sale of them causes Mr. Burns to keep a full stock.

HOW HAS THIS GREAT ENTERPRISE BEEN BUILT UP?—When Mr. Burns began four years ago he determined to keep the best furniture store in Western Mass. He put quality before quantity, though in the latter he excels all others in that city. He believed in giving every man his money's worth. Every job was well done, because he knew it paid to do it well. He bought the best goods, employed the best workmen and sold at moderate advance on cost. To-day he leads the trade in this section in all classes of furniture. People will be cordially received and shown about the warehouse, even if they are not ready to buy. 4w13

MR. WM. WESTFALL,

OF DUCHESS CO., N. Y., 80 YEARS OF AGE, SUFFERED CONTINUALLY FOR MANY YEARS FROM STONE in the BLADDER.

Great age and painful disease are a sad combination. Yet Mr. William Westfall, formerly of Rock City, Duchess Co., N. Y., now of Washington Hollow, in the same county, came to the office of Dr. David Kennedy, the eminent physician and surgeon of Rondout, N. Y., some time since, in a condition to excite the sympathy of the most cold-blooded and hard-hearted person in the word. We say he came—he was, rather, carried to the Doctor's office, for he was totally helpless, and bore the weight of 80 years besides. He had suffered long from Retention of Urine, and had all the symptoms of an aggravated case of calculus formations in the bladder. The usual instrumental examination revealed the presence in the bladder of a urinary calculus of uncommon size. Dr. Kennedy frankly told Mr. Westfall that, owing to his age and debility, an operation was out of the question, but that he could, by the prescription of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," together with local treatment, make him comfortable and leave him to live out all his days. The outcome of this was that the patient enjoys good health to this day.

THE REASONS WHY

Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is being extensively used by our people are as follows: It is a combination of vegetable alteratives. It is pleasant to the taste, adapted to both sexes and all ages, is effective in affording immediate relief in all cases of Kidney Troubles, Liver Complaints, Constipation of the Bowels and derangements peculiar to women. At the same time it purifies the blood, thus giving tone and strength to the system debilitated by disease or age. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists. 4w13

A Young Woman's Description of a Turkish Bath.

Has any of your wandering paths
Ever led you to the Turkish Baths?
They're the finest of all things, never doubt it;
Just sit down, and I'll tell you about it.

First of all you are shown to a cell;
There you proceed to take off—well,
You may retain your hairpins and rings,
But you must remove all your other things.
Then, you wrap yourself in a sheet,
And fold it around you from head to feet;
(And you'd better take one of your own,
If you chance to be large and pretty well grown.
For you'll find, and your modesty 'twill harrow,
That those provided are rather narrow.)

Then you follow a girl in solemn procession,
Like a white-robed nun, going to confession;
And she lays you out on a marble slab—
And you feel like an oyster, or maybe a crab.

To state that the room is extremely hot,
The bounds of truth over-steppeth not.
Pretty soon you begin to melt,
And you wonder how Shadrack and Meshack felt.
Then you're put in a room that's hotter still,
And here, you really begin to grill—
And the perspiration begins to flow,
And you think of poor Abed-nego.
There you lie, and think of your sins—
And all you've heard it will do for skins—
Till your very eyeballs begin to burn—

Then the pretty girl comes and says it's your turn,
And then stretched out, as if you were dead,
On a steamy, slippery, marble bed,
With a rubber pillow under your head,
You are splashed, and soaped, and scoured, and rubbed,
In fact, most comprehensively scrubbed—
And last, somewhat to your consternation,
Are played on, by hose, like a conflagration.

Then, tucked away in a clean white nest,
You can go to sleep or can lie and rest;
And everything in the whole arena
Is as clean as it is at home—or cleaner;
And when at last you dress for the street,
You feel so supple, and nice, and neat,
And even your temper has grown so sweet,
You feel no longer cold and hungry—
And you look at least to be ten years younger,
And be you fat as a seal or thin as a lath,
Forever you'll bless the Turkish Bath.

A SHOT FOR LIFE.

Where the Kentucky river cuts its way through the mountains, and upon either bank bold, rugged cliffs, that lift their summits five hundred and a thousand feet, as the case may be, above the stream, there lived a settler by the name of Rufus Branson, who with wife and little child, a charming little girl of some eight or nine years of age, occupied the rude cabin at the base of the precipice a little back from the river.

Although greatly exposed to danger, the Indians at that time being very plentiful throughout the region, he managed to live quietly for several years.

The Indians frequently visited the rude home of the hunter, and being always welcome, and provided with such food as was in the larder, they maintained a friendly attitude. Especially were they fond of the child, Maggie, and more than one fierce warrior had been seen sitting on the grass in front of the cabin, listening to the childish prattle of the little one, or else engaged in making her some toy or plaything from willow twigs or pliant bark.

In this manner several years had been passed, and Rufus Branson came to feel as though he was within the walls of a frontier fort. One evening Branson and his wife were seated near the door-way, when suddenly a shadow fell across the threshold, and the next moment a tall savage, whose reeling step and blood shot eyes told that he was intoxicated, appeared, and staggering to the log steps threw himself upon them. His first demand was for fire-water, which was of course refused, on the ground that there was none in the house. The Indian became cross and ugly, and declared with terrible oaths that if the liquor was not produced he would murder the whole household. Branson was a brave, determined man, and although he disliked the necessity, yet he saw he would be compelled to take prompt steps to prevent the savage from executing his threat.

Waiting until the warrior had made a demonstration, which he soon did by attempting to draw his tomahawk, Branson sprang at him, knocked him down with a blow of his fist, and then quietly disarmed and bound him where he lay. After a few moments of furious ravings and futile efforts to free himself, the savage rolled over and sank into a drunken sleep. He did not awake until next morning, but before he did so the settler had quietly removed his bonds and restored the weapons, which he laid by the sleeper's side The savage, on awakening, rose slowly to his feet, felt his wrists, as though the thongs had left a feeling there, took up his weapons and, without speaking a word, left and disappeared in the timber near by.

'What do you think of that?' asked the wife, turning to her husband with a frightened look.

'Pshaw! don't trouble your head about the drunken brute!' answered the settler, lightly; but as he turned away and stepped into the yard he muttered:

'Like it? Well not much. The fellow must be watched. I was in hopes that he would not have remembered, but the lump where my fist landed was enough, if nothing else, to recall the circumstance.'

The summer passed and they saw their drunken guest no more. He failed to make his appearance. But as the leaves began to fall, the settler one day, while returning from hunting on the hills, and passing through a dense piece of timber not far from the house caught sight of a figure lurking in the bushes; it quickly disappeared when he advanced to where it was. The figure was that of an Indian warrior, and Branson would have sworn that it was the Indian warrior whom he had knocked down and bound the previous spring. The news was not in any way comforting, and hence he did not tell his wife of his discovery. It would only alarm her, he thought, and without, perhaps, any good result. He simply told her that he had discovered bear tracks near by, and that she and the child must stay within or close to the house during his absence.

Several days afterward, Rufus Branson heard his dogs in the timber down by the river, and knowing they never opened without good cause, he caught up his rifle and hastened to where they were barking. They had struck a fresh bear trail, and as he arrived in sight, they fairly lifted it, going off in a straight line down the river.

The chase led him several miles, and when at last he got a shot that finished Bruin's career, he found that it was three o'clock in the afternoon. Swinging his meat to a sapling, out of reach of cat or wolf, he started for home to get his horse and return and fetch it that night.

Taking a near cut, he approached the cabin from the western side, where the timber grew heavy up to within a few yards of the building, and consequently he could not see the clearing, or what might be transpiring there, until he had passed through the wood.

Thus it was that, when within a short distance of his home, he heard a wild, piercing shriek; but he could only guess that something terrible must be taking place beyond the screen of bushes and leaves. Uttering a loud shout that his presence might sooner be known, Branson sprang forward like a wounded buck, a great fear in his heart, for he had only too clearly recognized in that scream the agonized voice of his own darling wife.

It took but a moment for him to clear the intervening timber and undergrowth, and as he dashed out into the clearing, holding his rifle ready for instant use, he comprehended in one swift glance all that had taken place, and what was further to fear.

Near the end of the cabin, facing the cliff, of which I have spoken, stood the mother, her face as pallid as death, her staring eyes fixed upon the precipitous heights up which the figure of an Indian was struggling.

'My child! my child!' was all the woman said, and Branson saw that the bundle in the Indian's arms was the form of their only child, Maggie.

Firm of heart, and with nerves as steady as the rocks around, the father for a moment quailed and cowered under what his quick senses told him was the deadly peril of the little one. But he was quick to recover.

The Indian was drawing away; step by step he was increasing the distance, and as he occasionally glanced backward and downward, the parents saw in his hideously painted countenance the fell purpose that actuated the abductor.

'God help me!' Branson muttered, as he raised his rifle, glancing through the sights and touched the trigger.

The Indian started violently at the shot. He was hit but not badly, and with a yell of devilish triumph he passed upward.

'Too low by a couple of inches,' said a low, calm voice at the settler's elbow.

Branson started as though he himself had been shot. Where was this man from? Who was he? Neither had seen him approach. There was no time for explanations. The stranger, a man rather below than above the ordinary height, whose fine athletic form was fully displayed by his close fitting buckskin garments, stepped quickly forward a few paces, and firmly planting his left foot in advance threw up an unusually long rifle, as though preparing to fire.

'For God's sake, stranger, be careful of my child!' cried Branson, while the poor agonized mother uttered an audible prayer.

'It's our only chance. I know that Indian,' was the quick reply; and the sharp click! click! of the hammer as it was drawn back, told that the critical moment had come.

By this time the Indian had nearly reached the summit of the steep. That he was wounded now became evident, as upon a broad ledge of rock he paused for a moment. This opportunity was seized by the unknown. Although the savage had taken the precaution to hold the child up in front of himself as a shield, covering nearly the whole of his brawny chest, but leaving his head uncovered, the stranger did not hesitate in making the shot.

For one second, as it gained its position, the rifle wavered, and then instantly became as immovable as though held in a vise. With clasped hands and staring eyes the parents watched the statue-like form upon which so much depended.

Suddenly a sharp report rang out; the white smoke drifted away, and as the vision became clearer, they saw the savage loose his hold upon the child, reel wildly an instant, and then pitch forward upon the rocks. It may be imagined that the father was not long in reaching the place where the child lay, and in a few moments more the little one was in its mother's arms.

'Tell us who you are, that we may know what name to mingle with our prayers,' exclaimed the mother, as the stranger prepared to depart.

'My name is Daniel Boone,' he said—and was gone.

AN EYE TO BUSINESS.—A stranger, who had been making some purchases in Mose Schaumburg's emporium on Austin avenue, left his umbrella in the store, whereupon one of the clerks, who had been in the store a few days, picked up the umbrella, and was about to run after the stranger and return it to him.

'Let me see dot umprella,' said Mose, whereupon it was handed to him.

'Py shimminy gracious, dot was a silk umprella. Chust put dat away pehind de calicos vere nopody vill stumble over it and preak his neck.'

'But I want to give it back to the owner,' remonstrated the clerk.

'Mine Gott, does you vant to make a stranger susbect dot Austin merchants have got no pishness cabacity. If you gives him dot umprella pack he would lose all confidence in our pishness cabacity.'—Texas Siftings.

LEAVE-TAKING.—When you are about to depart, do so at once, gracefully and politely, with no dallying. Don't say, 'It's about time I was going,' and then settle back and talk on aimlessly for another ten minutes. Some people have just such a tiresome habit. They will even rise, and stand about the room in various attitudes, keeping their hosts also standing, and then by an effort succeed in getting as far as the hall, when a new thought strikes them. They brighten up visibly and stand for some minutes longer, saying nothing of importance, but keeping every one in a restless, nervous state. After the door is opened the prolonged leave-taking begins, and everybody in general and in particular is invited to call. Very likely a last thought strikes the departing visitor which his friend must risk a cold to hear to the end. What a relief when the door is finally closed!

PREVENTION OF INTEMPERANCE.—All the multitudes of victims of the bottle who have gone down to darkness and their doom might have been saved by the very simple process of prevention. If one-twentieth part of the effort which is put forth in attempted reformation of the dissipated had been spent in persuading them never to drink at all, how different would have been the result! The right time to put up the parapet of total abstinence is in childhood or early youth. The right place to plant the parapet is at home and in the Sabbath school. Then is the time to instruct boys and girls as to the deadly peril which lies in the glass of intoxicant.—Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler.

The most afflicted part of the house is the window. It is always full of panes, and who has not seen more than one window-blind?

Work.

Work—and thou wilt bless the day
Ere the toil be done;
They that work not cannot play,
Cannot feel the sun.
God is living, working still;
All things work and move;
Work, wouldst thou their beauty feel,
And thy Maker's love.

All the rolling planets glow
Bright as burning gold!
Should they pause, how soon they'd grow
Colorless and cold;
Joy and beauty—where were they
If the world stood still?
Like the world, thy law obey,
And thy calling fill.

Wouldst thou know the joy of health?
Wouldst thou feel thy powers?
Industry alone is wealth,
What we do is ours.
Load the passive hours with thought,
While they stay with thee;
Then dispatch them, richly fraught,
To eternity.

BILL NYE ON OSCAR WILDE.

We went down to the overland train Thursday evening to see the great esthete. We picked him out without any trouble, and tackled him for a quiet little talk all by ourselves.

Mr. Wilde is very tall, with a face like a broadax. We told him our name was Nye, the great Wyoming esthetic. He smiled like a rolling-mill and shook our hands.

He wore a soft hat and a kind of steel-colored velvet sack coat. He also wore his hands in his pockets clear up to his elbow joints. He wears a kind of Byron collar, and a necktie the color of a diseased liver. His pants were of a gray material, and held in place with pale pink gum suspenders. These were shown as he stooped over, his coat being cut just below the shoulder-blades.

He wears his hair long, with hay and little mementoes from the sleeping-car in it. His face is thin, and when buried in a piece of pie must be a ghastly sight.

Mr. Wilde's teeth are evidently his own. Nobody could make teeth like them and escape the Vigilance Committee. They are broad and prominent, with a tendency to go out and investigate. He does not seem strong, but his breath proves this impression to be erroneous. Mr. Wilde wore a silk handkerchief the color of the illustrations found in the public document describing the cattle plague.

He spoke of various topics with a seductive drawl, wiggling his limber, angle worm legs as he spoke, and posing like a giraffe with the colic, for the benefit of the ladies who stood near. He wipes his nose in a languid, yet soulful way, and makes you wish he would do so again.

We asked him when he would return to England, and he tossed his mane, and said:

'Ah! I don't know whether I shall survive or not.'

'You get a good deal of free advertising, I see,' said the Boomerang man, gnawing a little fragment from an irregular piece of navy and thoughtlessly stepping on the patent leather shoe of the great esthete.

'Yes, sir. Most too much of it. Still, it pays moderately well—he! he! he! However, it is absolutely stupid of them to make such beastly and peculiar little jokes upon me.'

Mr. Wilde's complexion is very pallid, with here and there a pimple that relieves the monotony some. He wears no beard or moustache at all, but makes up for that with a large growth of hair upon his head, which falls in graceful festoons like a horse's tail over a green dashboard. He is just as full of soul as he can be, and walks and breathes and exists like a two-years-old steer in a cabbage grove. He smiles every little while like a colicky baby in its sleep, and sighs and places himself in statuesque positions, as though something had given away in his apparel, and he was trying to keep his ethereal pantaloons on till the people turned the other way.—Laramie Boomerang.

TREES BY THE FENCE LINE.

The question has often arisen whether the fruit which grows on the branches of a tree overhanging the land of a neighbor belongs to the owner, to the neighbor, or to both. The rules are now pretty well established, though in the past they were somewhat contradictory. If the stem or trunk of the tree grows so close to the line that parts of its actual body extend into each, neither owner can cut it down without the consent of the other, and the fruit is to be equally divided. If the stem of the tree stands wholly within the boundary line of one owner, he owns the whole tree with its products, although the roots and branches extend into the property of the other. There was an old rule of law that the latter might claim from the yield of the tree as much as might be an offset for the nourishment it derived from his estate, but this is now obsolete. The law gives the land owner on whose land the tree stands, the right to cut it down at his pleasure, and to pluck all the fruit from it while it stands. In New York State the courts have decided trespass for assault would lie by the owner of the tree against the owner of the land over which its branches extended, if he see personal violence, from reaching over and picking the fruit growing upon these branches while standing on the fence dividing these lands. The owner of the land over which the branches extend may lop the branches close to his line, if he so elects. In plain terms, if no portion of the trunk is within his line he may refuse all trespass of the tree on his premises, either above the ground or below it. But if he give the tree license either to extend its roots under his soil, or to hang its branches over his premises, he does not thereby gain any right to its fruit. He cannot pick it himself nor interfere with the picking by the owner, as long as the latter remains in the tree or on the fence which divides the property. This right to the fruit does not, however, permit the owner to come upon the soil on the other side of the line to gather the fruit, and all the fruit which falls without violence to the ground on that side may thus become the property of its owner.

DE LONG'S SAD STORY.

The navy department has received from Engineer Melville a detailed account of the finding of the remains of Lieutenant De Long, of the ill-fated Jeannette, and his companions. De Long, Dr. Ambler, and Ah Sam the cook, were found together partially buried in the snow, with the rest of the crew near at hand. De Long's logbook gives a pitiful record of the sufferings of the party from cold and hunger.

The notes were begun on Saturday, October 1, 1881, and the first entry is: '111th day and a new month. Called all hands as soon as the cook announced boiling water, and at 6:45 had our breakfast—half pound of deer meat and tea. The doctor resumed the cutting away of poor Erickson's toes this morning. No doubt it will have to continue till half his feet are gone or death ensues or we get to a settlement. Only one toe is left now.'

A record of each day's experience follows, the notes becoming very short toward the last. On Monday, Oct. 3, nothing was left to eat but their dog, which was killed, and a stew made of such parts as could not be cured. On the 7th the notes say: 'Breakfast consisted of the last half-pound of dog meat and tea. The last grain of tea was put in the kettle, and we are now about to undertake a journey of twenty-five miles, with some old tea leaves and two quarts of alcohol. However, I trust in God, and I believe that He who has fed us this far will not suffer us to die of want now.' The notes then go on as follows: Saturday, October 8: Called all hands at 5.30; breakfast—half ounce of alcohol and a pint of hot water. Alcohol proves of great advantage; keeps off cravings for food, preventing gnawing at stomach, and has kept up the strength of the men, who are given three ounces a day. Went ahead until 10.30, and after five miles struck big river again; have to turn back; halt at 5; only made advance of one mile. Hard luck. Snow, S. S. E. wind. Cold camp. But little wood and half ounce of alcohol.

Sunday, 9th: All hands at 4.30. One-half ounce alcohol. Read divine service. Sent Ninderman and Noras ahead for relief. They started at 7. Cheered them. Under way at 8: crossed creek, broke through ice all wet up to knees, dried clothing and under way again at 10.20. At 1 struck river bank. Halt for dinner—half ounce alcohol. Alexy shot three ptarmigans. Made soup. We are following Ninderman's track, although he is long since out of sight. Ice moving rapidly in river to northward. Halt at 4.40 on coming to wood. Found canoe. Lay our heads in it and go to sleep.

Monday, Oct. 10th: Last half ounce alcohol at 5.30. At 6.30 sent Alexy off to look for ptarmigan. Eat deerskin scraps. Yesterday morning ate my deerskin foot-tips. Under way at 8. In crossing creek three got wet. Built a fire and dried out. Ahead again till 11. Used up. Built a fire and made a drink out of the tea leaves and from the alcohol kettle. On again at noon. Very hard going. Ptarmigan tracks plentiful. At 3 halted, used up. Crawled into a hole in the bank. Alexy in quest of game. Nothing for supper except a spoonful of glycerine. All hands weak and feeble, but cheerful. God help us!

Tuesday, 11th: S. W. gale with snow. Unable to move. No game. One spoonful of glycerine and hot water for food. No more wood in our vicinity.

Wednesday, 12th: Breakfast, last spoonful of glycerine and hot water. For dinner a couple of handfuls of Arctic willow in a pot of water and drank the infusion. Every hour getting weaker. Hardly able to get firewood. S. W. gale with snow.

Thursday, 13th: Willow tea. No news from Ninderman. We are in the hands of God, and unless he relents we are lost. We cannot move against the wind, and staying here means starvation. Afternoon—went ahead for a mile. After crossing another river, or a head of the big river, missed Lee. Went down in a hole in the bank and camped. Sent back for Lee. He had lain down and was waiting to die. All united in saying Lord's Prayer and creed. After supper strong gale of wind. Horrible night.

Friday, 14th: Breakfast, willow tea; dinner half teaspoonful of sweet oil and willow tea. Alexy shot one ptarmigan. Had soup. Wind moderating.

Saturday, Oct. 15: Breakfast, willow tea and two old boots. Conclude to move at sunrise. Alexy breaks down; also Lee. Come to empty grain raft. Halt and camp. Signs of smoke at twilight to S'd.

Sunday, October 16: Alexy broke down. Divine service. Monday—Alexy dying. Doctor baptized him. Read prayers for sick. Mr. Collins' birthday; forty years old. About sunset Alexy died, exhausted from starvation. Covered with ensign, and then laid him in crib.

Tuesday: Calm and mild. Snow falling. Buried Alexy in the afternoon. Laid him on the ice and covered him with slabs of ice.

Wednesday: Cutting up tent to make footgear. Doctor went ahead to find new camp. Shifted by dark.

Thursday: bright and sunny, but very cold. Lee and Kaack done up.

Friday—Kaack was found dead about midnight between the Doctor and myself. Lee died about noon. Read prayers for sick when we found he was going.

Saturday—Too weak to carry the bodies of Lee and Kaack out on the ice. The Doctor, Collins and myself carried them around the corner out of sight. Then my eyes closed up.

Sunday—Everybody pretty weak. Slept or rested to-day, and then managed to get enough wood in before dark. Read part of divine service. Suffering in our feet. No foot-gear.

Monday—A hard night.

Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, 27th, 137th day—Iverson broken down.

Friday—Iverson died during early morning.

Saturday, 29th—Dressler died during night.

Sunday, October 30th, 140th day—Boyd and Gartz died during the night. Mr. Collins dying. [Note—De Long, Surgeon Ambler and Ah Sam, the cook, must have died soon after the last note was written.]

SATURDAY, JULY 15, 1882.

THERE are intimations that President Arthur may veto the river and harbor steal when the bill reaches him. It will be a big feather in his cap, and a grand thing for the Republican party, if he will do so.

IT is reported from Washington that Guiteau's body has been reduced to a skeleton, which will soon be on exhibition in a glass case at the army medical museum. Is there no trace of common decency left in the officials who are responsible in this matter?

CITY MARSHAL RICE of Springfield is charged with taking from the Ludlow post office a letter addressed to Mrs. Alice Carr, taking therefrom a picture of her husband and having a duplicate made, and then returning picture and letter to the post office. Carr is a liquor spotter, who failed to appear at court when wanted as a witness. The marshal is understood to admit taking the letter, but claims to have had Mrs. Carr's permission to do so. He appeared before the United States Commissioner at Boston Wednesday, and secured a postponement of the hearing until the 26th inst.

ROSCOE CONKLING'S home friends serenaded him at Utica Tuesday evening, and he made quite an address, but avoided any allusion to political affairs, further than to say that there is much in our present condition to make men think together who have long thought apart, and that the admonition of the hour is frugality, foresight and care. "We have more need of the brake than of steam in a good many ways just now," he said. "The heart knoweth his own bitterness;" and the ex-senator doubtless appreciates the value of the brake as he did not before his resignation. His words are very true, nevertheless, and should be heeded.

THERE is considerable talk up in the 11th district, formerly the 10th, of running William Whiting of Holyoke for Congress this year; and it's a capital idea. If Mr. Whiting's friends take hold of the matter in earnest, it will be a cold day for Congressman Norcross when the Republican nominating convention meets. Mr. Whiting is the largest fine paper manufacturer in the world; has been mayor of his city, and a member of the State Senate. He is a self-made man, and well made; is well versed in public affairs, and has an energetic business talent which is greatly needed in Congress. The 11th district will do a good day's work when it elects Mr. Whiting to represent it at Washington.

DON CAMERON is boss of Pennsylvania no longer. When the Independent Republicans of that State recently nominated State officers in opposition to his "regular" ticket, he swore roundly that there should be no compromise with them. But he had to choose between compromise and certain defeat, and on Wednesday the State committee met at Philadelphia, and at Cameron's dictation made four propositions to the Independents, one of them being for a new convention to nominate candidates, to be called in accordance with the rules adopted by the Independents. This is a complete and humiliating surrender for Cameron, but the Independents decline to consider any of the propositions, unless coupled with the condition that the candidates of each faction withdraw and decline to accept a renomination.

CONGRESS is not making a very good record for itself. It has been making appropriations for useless purposes with such a reckless hand that there will hardly be any surplus left in the treasury next year; and still the national board of health has to close most of its health stations in the country, for lack of appropriations to keep them running, so that immigrants will have a fine opportunity for spreading through the country small-pox, yellow fever and other contagious diseases which they may bring with them from abroad. Some of the navy yards will have to close, too, if appropriations are not speedily forthcoming. Congress seems very complacent, however, regardless of the fact that dog days are close at hand, and election not far away. The members think, perhaps, that an acquaintance with Washington air in midsummer will be a good preparation for the heated political campaign coming.

ENGLAND has tired of parleying with Arabi Pasha, the Egyptian minister of war, and now practically the ruler of that country, and as he persisted in strengthening the fortifications at Alexandria, mounting guns, and preparing for war generally, the English fleet, under Admiral Seymour, opened fire on the forts Tuesday morning. The bombardment was very effective, and several forts were silenced. The Egyptians hung out a flag of truce Wednesday morning, but refused to accept Admiral Seymour's terms, their object being to gain time, and the bombardment was continued. It was found on Thursday that the Egyptians had abandoned the city Wednesday night, under the flag of truce, and retreated inland. After the army had left, the city was given over to fire and pillage, and a large part of the city has been burned, people robbed and many killed, and terrible scenes of atrocity enacted. Arabi has outwitted the English, and they can do nothing more until an army of land forces arrives, and then the subjugation of the country will prove no easy matter, for the tropical sun and yellow fever will prove potent and terribly destructive allies of the Egyptians.

Since the first oil well was opened in 1859 the product of the wells has added $1,500,000,000 to the wealth of the United States in the value of the crude oil and its products. To-day the exports are over 1,000,000 gallons a day.

AFFAIRS at the State Prison have assumed a more peaceful aspect, and last week's rebellion has come to an end, for the present at least. On Sunday evening the convicts were summoned to the chapel, where Warden Earle addressed them, telling them their "yard privilege" of two hours liberty on holidays was at an end, but that their other priveliges would be continued if they obeyed the prison regulations. On Tuesday, after a week's rest, the convicts were sent to the shops—all but about twenty who were undergoing special punishment—and they seemed glad enough to get back to work and regular diet once more.

The first wife of Brigham Young died at Salt Lake last week. She became a convert to Mormonism at Avon, N. Y., in 1831, and went to the Mormon colony, then in Ohio, where she married Young. It is said that, having accepted the doctrine of polygamy, she made no opposition when her husband began to practise it extensively, though she invariably fell ill from excitement and grief at every new marriage. She lived separate from the other wives, and kept her five children as much as possible from the rest.

Some idea of the rapid growth of the coffee trade of the world may be obtained from the fact that the total production, which was 675,000,000 pounds in 1859, has now risen to 1,300,000,000 pounds or nearly doubled. In Europe alone the consumption of coffee is said to have increased 240,000,0000 pounds in the single year of 1879. As for the producing countries Brazil now holds the first place, with a total of 560,000,000 pounds against 330,000,000 in 1870.

An amusing blunder was made recently by a London paper, which solemnly told its reader sabout a "National Drunkards' Conference" in Indiana, which was "attended by 20,000 drunkards from all parts of the United States." The Dunkards, a religions sect, are the people who held the conference.

While the train was waiting in Springfield the friend had stepped off in search of her two remaining children, leaving her baby in the car. The husband of lady No. 1 had also left the train to assist in the search, and the train came away and left them. The lady was advised to wait here with her babies, a telegram informed the husband and friend in Springfield of the condition of affairs, and when the 3.48 express came along there was a happy family reunion, and all went on their way rejoicing.

The many friends of Rev. C. H. Eaton, formerly pastor of the Universalist church in this place, will read with pleasure the following mention of his success in his present field of labor. In the course of a review of the churches in that city, the New York Times says: "The leading church is, of course, the one presided over for so many years by the late Dr. Chapin—the church of the Divine Paternity. This has a membership of 450, but the average attendance is more than twice this number. When Dr. Chapin was in his prime, this was not only the leading church of the denomination, but it contested first place against the whole field. But even in those days the actual membership was not as large as now. During the latter and failing years of Dr. Chapin's ministry there was a decided falling away both in attendance and interest. Now there is new and young blood in the pulpit. Mr. Eaton, the present pastor, is becoming a prime favorite, and is rapidly moving upward on the ladder of fame. All his people speak of him in most enthusiastic terms, and there is a rapid increase of membership. As compared with ten years ago the increase represents 33 per cent of the present membership."

While riding through this usually quiet place, their horse became frightened by a passing train, and seemed to think the men needed a bath, it being a very warm day. So very unceremoniously he backed them over the river bank into that invigorating stream, landing them, carriage and all, bottom up, so that it was necessary to pull them out with ropes. Carriage damaged some; no lives lost; hats not found at last accounts.

There has been considerable sickness in the village for the past few weeks, but most of the sick have recovered. There have been but three cases of scarlet fever, only one proving fatal—Lizzie I. Hopkins, only daughter of E. S. Hopkins, a bright and promising girl of 9 years of age. S. W. Longley, long an invalid, died at his home last Sunday morning, aged 60. Geo. W. Longley is the only surviving member of the family of seven. Mr. Longley was for more than 25 years crier of the Hampshire county courts, and has been postmaster since 1862. His son succeeds him in the last-named office.

The fireworks on Wednesday evening were a perfect success. The evening being a little cloudy, the display was magnificent. One thousand spectators assembled on and around the park to witness the spectacle. Seats for about two hundred were provided, and Kenfield's Cornet Band played several brilliant pieces, adding much to the enjoyment of the evening. The citizens feel heartfelt thanks to M. P. Walker, for the generosity manifested by him on this as well as on other occasions. A. R. fund.

Jedediah A. Paine, whose death occurred at Princeton, Ill., on the 2nd inst, was a native of Ludlow, Mass., where he was born Sept. 25th, 1808. He lived in this village for many years, and in 1831 was married to Miss Harriet A. Graves. In 1850 he went West, and the next year moved with his family to Princeton, where he has since resided. Mrs. Paine died in January, 1879, and but two children of the family are left. Mr. Paine suffered a stroke of apoplexy on the 18th ult., and did not speak or exhibit more than partial consciousness from that time to his death. The Bureau Co. Tribune, of Princeton, says of the deceased: "Mr. Paine was a carpenter and builder by trade, and several fine residences, with one hotel, were built by him in Princeton. He was a man highly thought of among men and an indication of the estimation in which he was held by the community of which he was for many years a member, is the fact that, nominally a Democrat, in a Republican town, he has been with the exception of but two years assessor of the town of Princeton for the past twenty-two years, and at the two elections within that time, at which he was not elected, he would not be a candidate. Since 1870 he has been assessor and collector continuously. He was a member of no religous organizaton but rested serenely and happily in the belief that Infinite wisdom had planned all things well, and that the measure of his responsibility would be filled if he did right according to the knowledge given him."

HAMPDEN.

M. H. Chaffee supplies the city of Springfield with charcoal.

Davis & Temple, coal dealers, have a government contract to furnish the armory with charcoal, the price to be 9¾ cts. per hundred.

Farmers report the prospect of a large yield of potatoes. Bugs are not as numerous and Paris green extinguishes them effectually.

The picnic in Thresher's grove on the Fourth was an agreeable affair, the brass band furnishing the music. Ice cream and "sweet cider" were served to all who desired at the Burleigh corner store. As Hampden is a temperance town, the Fourth was quiet here. Some said Russell, Henry and Martin were musical, but the ice cream vender kept them quiet and away from the officer.

Elder Vinica is as usual trading at the west end of the village. Bill Burns, his neighbor, is selling many goods, and if he gets his pay must be doing well. McCarty & Sons, it is said, sell as many goods as any store in the village. Smith Bros. keep the largest stock, have the inside track for the factory trade, and always make money when they sell. C. I. Burleigh & Co. are the rushers, and make the most show, take and fill more orders than any others, it is said. Had forgotten the drug store. As the proprietor has no license, and is watched so closely by the fathers of the town, probably his prescriptions are not large. His soda fountain, however, is patronized by all the temperance people, and even the church-going. Should a gill of liquor be sold by him, it would be made public at once from the rostrum. The whole village is now looking finely, and it is pleasant and a lovely place under the present year's prohibition.

Mr. Editor:—We would like to inquire if you know what has become of "Jumbo, Jr." He promised us we should hear from him again after the commissioners had decided on the Burleigh road, but we have looked in vain for his communication, and for the information of the readers of the JOURNAL I may as well say that although the eagle soared aloft and the carpenter swore, it was not in vain, for the commissioners concluded that the public necessity did not require the outlay of two thousand dollars by the little town of Hampden for the benefit of three individuals, and before the ex-deputy sheriff button-holes another set of commissioners he had better find out what sort of men they are, and not brag too quick.——The farmers have commenced haying lightly, and find a very light crop. Oats are looking well; rye is good and will soon be ripe; corn is backward; but potatoes are looking nice and are promising a large crop.——David McCray has just finished an addition to his barn; and Frank S. Smith, who has leased the John Beebe farm, is putting the house and barn under extensive repairs.——The fireworks which were advertised for the Fourth were displayed Thursday evening. Altogether, they were a success, and the Hampden Brass Band gave a concert, which was enjoyed by an admiring crowd, estimated at from 500 to 700.

The tax collector has commenced his rounds with pretty heavy bills, but it should be remembered that we voted and appropriated more money last spring than usual for various objects which we hope to get the benefit of in due time. The assessors of course are not to blame for heavy taxes, and we hear but little grumbling except from those who think their neighbors were not taxed quite as much as they should have been. There can be no reason for criticising the doings of the assessors, notwithstanding some seemed afraid the taxes could not be made by the new board.

Mr. Editor:—Our officers in years past have been altogether too lenient with dog owners. The law requires that "all dogs shall be licensed on or before the 30th day of April in each year," and also that "any person becoming the owner or keeper of a dog at any time during the year, a license must be procured, provided the dog is more than three months old." Parties after being notified by postal card often fail to come to time, and if they come at all, do so very leisurely. Warrants have been given to constables commanding them to kill all unlicensed dogs and prosecute the owners thereof, and it would serve the negligent ones right if they should be treated to a dose of justice. If one man pays a license it is not right that his neighbor should sneak out of it. —* * *—

The recent examination in the signal service office of 600 tornadoes recorded during the past 87 years shows that these destructive storms occur most frequently in June. They are more frequent in April than in July, and in May and September than in August. The records also show that while tornadoes occur generally between 5 and 6 p. m. no hour of the day is entirely free from them. Each storm-cloud travels from 12 to 60 miles an hour, the average of the path of destruction being 1085 feet. The wind within a vortex sometimes reaches a velocity of 800 miles an hour, the average velocity being 392 miles. Tornadoes always move eastward, but may be swayed from side to side during their progress.

Pathfinder Railway Guide*" will give all needed knowledge in regard to any railroad in New England and vicinity, the principal steamboat lines, hotels, officers of transportation companies, and everything necessary to make traveling easy and pleasant. Published the first of each month by the New England Railway Publishing Co., 117 Franklin Street, Boston. Price $2.50 per year; single copies 25 cts.

Matters are getting into a serious condition with the Massachusetts Central road, and it is questionable whether the operations of the railroad continue much longer under the present status of affairs. Debts are pressing to be paid, and the rolling stock is owned by Contractor Munson, who is under no obligations to supply the road with it. The directors have been unable to agree upon a scheme to complete the road, and it looks now, more than ever, as if the bondholders would have to come forward and keep the ball moving or it will not move at all.—Boston Journal.

THE IMPENDING FATE.

AN INTERESTING CHAPTER FROM THE LIFE OF A PROMINENT BOSTONIAN.

(Boston Globe.)

The readers of this paper were more or less amazed at a most remarkable statement from one of our leading citizens which appeared in yesterday's issue. So unusual were the circumstances connected with it, and so much comment did it occasion on the street and in social circles, that a representative of this paper was commissioned to investigate its details and verify its facts. The article referred to was a statement made by Mr. B. F. Larrabee, of the New York and Boston Dispatch Express Company, whose office is on Arch street. Mr. Larrabee was found by the newspaper man in his private office, and on being questioned, said:

"Well, sir, logically I have been dead, but really I am as you can see me. A little over a year ago I was taken sick. My trouble was not severe at first and I thought it was the result of a slight cold. Somehow I felt unaccountably tired at times, although I took an abundance of sleep. Then, again, I had dull and strange pains in various parts of my body. My appetite was good one day and I had none whatever the next, and my head pained me more or less much of the time. A while afterward I noticed much that was peculiar about the fluid I was passing and that a sediment, scum and a strange accumulation appeared in it. Still I did not realize that these things meant anything serious, and I allowed the illness to run along until on the 28th day of October I fell prostrate while walking along Tremont street. I was carried home and did not go out of the house until the middle of December. I then went down town and attempted to attend to my business until the 13th of last January, when I was taken with a severe relapse. My symptoms were terrible. I was fearfully bloated; I suffered severe pains in all parts of my body and it was almost impossible to get my breath. For six days I never laid down and never slept. I was constantly attended by my regular physician, Dr. Johnson, and Doctor Bowditch also came to see me nearly every day. There was no doubt that I was suffering from Bright's disease of the kidneys in its worst form and last stages, accompanied by other troubles in my liver and heart. In spite, however, of the skill of the physicians, I kept growing worse and finally they tapped my side in the vicinity of the heart, taking away forty-six ounces of water. This relieved me for a time, but I soon became as bad as before. Then the doctor gave me up entirely, declared I could not live more than twenty-four hours, and my daughter, who was residing in Paris, was telegraphed for. Still I lingered along for several weeks, far more dead than alive, but never giving up hope. One night—it was on the 20th of April, I very well remember—my attendant, who was reading the paper to me, began an article which described my disease and sufferings exactly. It told how some severe cases of Bright's disease had been cured, and so clearly and sensibly did it state the case that I determined to try the means of cure which it described. So I sent my man to the drug store, procured a bottle of the medicine, unknown to my physicians and friends, and took the first dose at 10 o'clock. At that time I was suffering intensely. I could not sleep; I had the short breaths and could scarcely get any air into my lungs. I was terribly bloated from head to foot, and the motion of my heart was irregular and painful. The next morning I was able to breathe freely; the pain began to leave me and the bloating decreased. I continued to take the medicine, and to-day, sir, I am as well as I ever was in my life, and wholly owing to the wonderful, almost miraculous power of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. I do not know what this medicine is made of, or anything else about it, but know it saved my life when I was given up by the doctors and had really been dead for weeks; that it has kept me in perfect health ever since and has cured many of my friends to whom I have recommended it. There are a number of very remarkable cases in Lynn and Salem, as well as in this city, that it has cured. My recovery is so remarkable that it has excited much attention, and physicians as well as others have investigated it thoroughly. I am glad they have, for I feel that the results of such a wonderful cure should be known to the thousands in all parts of the land who are suffering from troubles of the kidneys, liver or heart, in some of their many dangerous forms."

The representative of the press thanked Mr. Larrabee for his very frank and clear statement, and was about to leave the office when a gentleman stepped up to him and inquired if he was seeking information about Mr. Larrabee's sickness and recovery. The scribe replied that he was, whereupon the gentleman said:

"And so am I, and I have come all the way from Chicago for that very purpose. Kidney troubles seem to be alarmingly increasing all over the country, and I have a very near relative who is afflicted much as Mr. Larrabee was. I have been to see the physicians of whom Mr. Larrabee speaks, and I tell you, sir, it is simply wonderful."

"What did they say?" asked the man of news.

"Say! why, sir, they fully confirm everything Mr. Larrabee has stated. I went to see Dr. D. A. Johnson, at 20 Worcester street. He was absent when I called, and so I stepped into the Commonwealth hotel, where Mr. Larrabee was living at the time of his sickness. Messrs. Brugh & Carter are the proprietors, and I asked them about Mr. Larrabee's case. Mr. Brugh pointed to the electric annunciator and said, 'why for weeks and weeks every time that bell rang I said: That means the death of Mr. Larrabee. No one around the hotel ever dreamed that he would recover, and when the doctors would come down from his room they would shake their heads and say there was no hope. The arrangements for the funeral were made and his recovery was simply a miracle.'

"I then called on Dr. Johnson, who said that Mr. Larrabee's case was a very remarkable one. He was his family physician and expected his death every hour for a number of weeks and never called to see him during that time, but he was prepared for it. The doctor said the recovery was due to Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and if he had friends, male or female, troubled with Albumen or any kidney troubles he should certainly advise them to use this remedy. Dr. Johnson said kidney difficulties are more common than most people think, and that many symptoms which are supposed to be other diseases arise from the kidneys. He said that ladies after gestation are specially subject to albuminous troubles which require prompt attention.

"Well, I then came down and called on Dr. H. Ingersoll Bowditch on Boylston street. The old doctor was inclined to be reticent but fully confirmed all I had previously learned. He had attended Mr. Larrabee, and supposed him beyond all hope, and he was afterwards restored, as he said, by Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

"I next went to see Dr. Melville E. Webb, at the Hotel Cluny, for you see I was determined to be thorough in the matter. I found Dr. Webb a most clear-headed and well-informed gentleman, and he said:

"'I know of Mr. Larrabee's case from having thoroughly investigated it as a medical director of a Life Insurance Company, and it is one of the most remarkable cases I have ever met. Mr. Larrabee had all the manifestations of a complication of diseases, and in their worst forms. He had albumen and casts in the urine, and a terribly diseased liver and spleen. Indeed, he was so bad that he threw himself upon the floor, and with his head upon a hassock struggled for breath. It was on the night when he was so bad and when all his medical advisers had long given him up, that he began using Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. The next morning at 10 o'clock he was able to breathe freely, and has been ever since. I subjected him to the most thorough examination possible, after his recovery, and 'I can't find out about him.' His kidneys, liver, lungs and heart are perfectly well and sound. I can only add that, from what I have seen, I would unhesitatingly recommend this remedy.'"

The conclusions from the statements above made which come to the newspaper man as well as the general public, must be two-fold. First that a modern miracle of healing has been performed in our midst, and that, too, by the simplest means, and one which is within the reach of every one. It should be remembered that Bright's disease is not usually a sudden complaint. Its beginnings are slight and its growth slow. The symptoms by which it may be detected are different with different persons, no two people usually having the same. This fact was manifest in the case of Mr. Larrabee, and he had no idea of the terrible complaint which had attacked him until it became fixed upon him. Secondly, testimonials of such high character and so outspoken in tone conclusively prove the value of the remedy, and its superior nature to the proprietary articles with which the public have been flooded. "The greater includes the less," and the remedy which has been proven so valuable and has saved a life after it was brought down to death's door, must unquestionably be certain in all minor troubles which are so disastrous unless taken in time.

A DAY DOWN CELLAR.—Take one day down cellar to throw out and carry away all dirt, rotten wood, decaying vegetables and other accumulations that have gathered there; brush down cobwebs, and with a bucket of lime give the walls and ceiling a good coating of whitewash. No matter if you don't understand the business; no matter if you have not got a whitewash brush; take an old broom that the good wife has worn out and spread it on thick and strong. It will sweeten up the air in the cellar, the parlor and the bed chambers, (if your cellar is like the ordinary farm-house cellars) and it may save your family from afflictions of fevers, diphtheria and doctors. While the lime is about, you might as well give the inside of the hen house a coat of it. It will be a good thing for the fowls, if you do.—Boston Journal.

Lines to a Premature Mosquito.

Unwelcome insect, that with feeble wing
Intrudest thus upon the backward spring,
A vernal blunder,
Brief in this chilly world will be thy stay,
And if thou seest the eve of one cool day,
'Twill be a wonder.

When mother Nature from a bed of slime
Evolved thee several weeks before thy time,
What freak convulsed her?
Why did she send thee, lean and naked, forth
To face the biting breezes of the north,
Without an ulster?

With drooping pinion, guiltless of a sting,
Thou seemest now a poor and broken thing,
Asking protection;
Not one whose droning song with night begins,
Joyful in dooming heated human skins
To vivisection.

Thou shouldst have died hereafter, in the strife
Of angry hands upraised to take thy life
And give no quarter.
Now quick consumption or a hacking cough,
When life has scarce begun, will take thee off,
A proto-martyr.

I will not hurt thee. Innocent, and young,
And harmless yet, I count thee not among
My worthy foemen.
I note thee as a sign of bites to be,
But may the mercy that I show to thee
Avert the omen!

BABY IS DEAD.

How strangely sad is the thought that baby is dead—that its merry voice and innocent prattle, filling the home with the sunshine of love, will never again be heard; that the luster of her bright eyes, dancing first with mischief, then tenderness and love, is forever dimmed; that the sound of baby footsteps, sounds causing the eye to sparkle, lips to utter sweet words, hands to stretch forth to clasp the approaching form in fond embrace, how sad to know that the baby footsteps will be listened for in vain, forever stilled; that the little dimpled hands that tried so hard to lighten mamma's burdens, hands which tenderly patted the cheek, and brushed away sorrow's tear, that even in dying tried to soothe the sorrow of loved ones, the little hands are quiet forever! Forever! Can it be that there is no future conscious existence—that a crushed pebble scattered by the four winds of heaven finds a resting place in nature and yet our loved ones live not again! If so, whence this yearning, this constant striving of the soul, for something brighter, purer, better, out of and beyond this cold, grasping world of ours; of what avail the shout of victory on the lips of the proud conqueror, of what avail the vaulting ambition leading men to do and dare, to crush obstacles and remove difficulties, of what avail the wealth of affection, the life struggle, if death ends all? No, no, it cannot be, this must be but the dim dawn of a glorious awakening, a school in which we are prepared, made purer, for the life beyond. Then place the baby treasures away, check the grief which comes welling up from heart depths, kiss baby a brief, tender farewell, and lay away in the bosom of mother Nature the loved form, the former receptacle of the purified soul which has been wafted heavenward by the breath of angels.

'What am economy?' began Brother Gardner, as he got a brace for his feet, and looked Pickles Smith square in the left eye. 'I answer dat economy am de art of extractin' de most walue fur de least money. Economy am de art ob making time count. Take de plumber, fur instance. All he wants to begin life on am a solderin'-iron, a fire pot an' a bar ob solder. Economy does de rest. He gits pay fur de hours he sleeps as well as fur de hours he works. Likewise, moreober, fur his helper. Time am cash to him. Ebery five minutes gone while he am huntin' fur a leak am so much added to his capital. Take de house painter. If he kin kill fo' minits gwine up a ladder, he knows he kin kill seben comin' down. Ebery minit he gains am dead cash. He could save ten cents a day by economizin' on cigars, but he doan' have ter. He can save fifty by economizin' on de man who hires him half a day.'

Soon after the late Horace Maynard entered Amherst College he put on the door of his room a large letter V. Its presence exposed him to questions and ridicule, but paying no attention to either he kept the letter in its place. At the end of four years graduation day came, and Mr. Maynard was appointed to deliver the valedictory. After having received the compliments of the faculty and the students of the college for the honor he had received, Mr. Maynard called the attention of his fellow-graduates to the letter V over the door of his room, and asked if they then understood what was meant by the letter V. After short reflection they answered:—'Yes. Valedictory.' He replied: 'You are right.' His fellows then asked if he had the valedictory on his mind when he pasted the letter over his door. Mr. Maynard replied: 'Assuredly I had.'

This is the way they are said to make love in Germany: 'Do you love me, Gretchen?' said a burly Teuton to the maiden of his choice. 'I do,' was the meek reply. 'And will you be my wife?' 'I will.' 'Then, my darling, come here and pull off my boots,' and the proper relationship between husband and wife was at once established.

Sophronia—'Can the weather prophets foretell sudden rainstorms in summer?' They could, probably, if they knew the dates on which Sunday school picnics would be held.

Numbskull: She (encouragingly)—'Your step just suits mine exactly.' He (nervously)—'So glad to hear you say so; I know I'm such a bad waltzer.'

Where pangs the mortal flesh assail,
And give a bitterness to life,
Making the cheek with anguish pale,
Amid the fierce internal strife;
Then Sanford's Ginger soothes the pain,
And smiling health looks up again. j

Impure water, unhealthy climate, unripe fruit unwholsome food, malaria, and a thousand little ills are nothing to those fortified by the use of Sanford's Ginger, "the delicious." j

BY UNIVERSAL ACCORD

Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the best of all purgatives for family use. They are the product of long, laborious, and successful chemical investigation, and their extensive use, by physicians in practice, and by all civilized nations, proves them the best and most effectual purgative pill that science can devise. Being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use, and being sugar coated they are pleasant to take. In intrinsic value and curative powers no other pills can be compared with them; and every person, knowing their virtues, will employ them, when needed. They keep the system in perfect order, and maintain in healthy action the whole machinery of life. Mild, searching and effectual, they are especially adapted to the needs of the digestive apparatus, derangements of which they prevent and cure, if timely taken. They are the best and safest physic to employ for children and weakened constitutions, where a mild but effectual cathartic is required.

For sale by all druggists. 4

PIANO CHAIR.

TEACHERS, SCHOLARS and FINISHED AMATEUR AND PROFESSIONAL PLAYERS WILL ALIKE WELCOME IT.

The practice of sitting at a piano or organ practising for hours together, without a support for the back, is tiresome in the extreme, as every player knows; and, giving way to the tired feeling, very many, especially young persons, attempt to rest or relieve themselves by assuming a position which is not only ungraceful, but unnatural and unhealthy, and are often permanently injured thereby. To rest the back, it is not always necessary to incline the body to the rear. The body may lean forward, but if there is something against which the back may be pressed, it affords a sense of support, a feeling of ease which can be obtained in no other way, and really forms a true rest. The ordinary piano stool is not a comfortable seat under any circumstances, yet no material improvement was made upon the original design until this Back Piano Chair was invented. Although this Chair has been before the public but a short time, it has already attracted marked attention, and has gained the highest approval of all who have tested it. We are confident that it will fully meet the needs of thousands who have long been hoping and anxiously looking for some such improvement.

FINE JOB PRINTING

AT THE

JOURNAL OFFICE.

A SPRINGFIELD ENTERPRISE.

It is no longer necessary to go to Boston or New York for fine Furniture, since a first-class Furniture Warehouse has been established in Springfield. D. Burns, at 409 Main street, has made a success of keeping a fine quality of Furniture, and people are finding it out.

LACE AND MADRAS CURTAINS, DRAPERIES, LAMBREQUINS, ETC.—This season Mr. Burns has introduced a superior stock of Lace and Madras Curtains, Lambrequins and Draperies. He secured the invaluable aid of Benjamin George, a first-class workman and artist from the noted house of H. A. Turner of Boston. By his skill and taste a very large increase of business in this department has been realized. This marked success arises from the fact that people of wealth and taste are now convinced that they can adorn their homes as well by going to Springfield as to Boston or New York. Mr. Burns's artist visits the homes of his patrons and makes special designs adapted to each house, thereby fitting up the windows in a much neater manner than by a general selection of goods.

UPHOLSTERY GOODS.—Mr. George has also charge of the Upholstery Department. Extra pains are taken to upholster in a lasting manner. No excelsior is used, but only the very best of material enters into this work. People are finding out that the very superior upholstery done at Burns's is a new thing in Springfield, and they show that they can appreciate such work by the great demand for it which is coming in to Burns's warerooms. Nothing better is made in Boston or New York.

MAHOGANY CHAMBER SETS.—Just now there is a sharp demand for elegant chamber sets wrought in mahogany. Burns has at all times these most beautiful sets, fresh from the factories at Grand Rapids, Michigan. Many of your readers can see these sets in Holyoke, Northampton, Easthampten, Westfield, Wilbraham and other places, where owners have bought them at Burns's.

OTTOMAN BED LOUNGES.—This elegant parlor ornament becomes at night a most comfortable bed. The lounge is by far the finest article of the kind in the market. It is upholstered in a very ornamental style and made of the best materials. A large sale of them causes Mr. Burns to keep a full stock.

HOW HAS THIS GREAT ENTERPRISE BEEN BUILT UP?—When Mr. Burns began four years ago he determined to keep the best furniture store in Western Mass. He put quality before quantity, though in the latter he excels all others in that city. He believed in giving every man his money's worth. Every job was well done, because he knew it paid to do it well. He bought the best goods, employed the best workmen and sold at moderate advance on cost. To-day he leads the trade in this section in all classes of furniture. People will be cordially received and shown about the warehouse, even if they are not ready to buy. 4w13

A BRAVE LADY.

SHE ENDURES THE PAIN OF A SEVERE SURGICAL OPERATION WITHOUT TAKING CHLOROFORM.

(From the Courier.)

Mrs. Schoonmaker, of Creek Locks, Ulster Co., New York, had the misfortune to entirely lose the sight of one of her eyes, through an accident, and endured painful inflammatory action therein for two long years; the other eye finally becoming sympathetically affected, her general health seriously suffering; indeed, she was a mere wreck, a walking skeleton. In this terrible strait she consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who told her at once that the injured eye must be removed. She quietly but firmly said, "All right-Doctor, but don't give me chloroform. Let my husband sit by my side during the operation, and I will neither cry out nor stir." The work was done, and the poor woman kept her word. Talk of soldierly courage! This showed greater pluck than it takes to face a hundred guns. To restore her general health and give tone and strength to the system, Dr. Kennedy then gave the "Favorite Remedy," which cleansed the blood and imparted new life to the long suffering woman. She rapidly gained health and strength, and is now well. The "Favorite Remedy" is a priceless blessing to women. No family should be without it Your druggist has it. If not, send to Dr. Davi, Kennedy, Rondout, New York. 4w17

God's Patience.

Abraham, at his tent,
One mystic evening when the sunset shades
O'er western hills proclaim that daylight fades,
Saw, withered, old and bent,
A stranger drawing near; with greeting blest,
He ushered in for water, food and rest.

With eager haste he spread
Before his guest the solemn evening meal;
But when the stranger did no thanks reveal,
Impatiently he said:
"How canst thou eat or drink, nay, press the sod
Of this green earth, and give no thanks to God?"

Then, when in stubborn scorn
He still refused to name the holy Name,
The patriarch's stern wrath burst like a flame,
And feeble, old and worn,
Unfed, he thrust him out into the night,
Crying, "Begone! Haste from my loathing sight!"

But in the midnight still
The voice of God was heard in calm reproof:
"Where is the guest that came beneath thy roof?"
Then Abraham answered chill,
"He would not give Thee thanks; so without doubt
In righteous scorn I turned and thrust him out."

Then slow the Voice replied:
"I have had patience with erring souls
These hundred years; in love have let them roll;
And couldst not thou have tried
One single night to bear with him, when I
Have let in pity these long years go by?"

A HAPPY MOVE.

'Viva, dear, it is getting near the first of May.'

And gentle Mrs. Raynor laid down the coat that was perpetually becoming elbowless, and looked across the lamp-lit table with anxious eyes.

'Yes, mamma, I know,' a trifle wearily.

Viva, a slender, pretty girl with dark brown hair gathered loosely behind shell pink ears, and lips red as a rose, met her mother's gaze with eyes bright with wistful thoughtfulness.

'And we must move, of course,' cried a shrill young voice from the sofa, where sat Jessie, a volatile, overgrown school-girl, 'because the front gate is off its hinges, and the roof leaks, and—'

'Yes, Jessie, we all know the reasons for moving, but give mamma an opportunity to suggest where.'

'There is hardly much choice about that,' the pale-faced little woman said sadly.

'Some place where the rent would be moderate; but'—a sudden look of longing shining out of the pain-worn face—'I would give all the world, dear, to see the country again.'

A gleam of quick determination came into Viva's velvety brown eyes.

'And so you shall, mamma,' she said emphatically.

'My darling, how?' said her mother, in mild surprise.

'Well'—Viva puckered up her low, white brow, and tried to look wise and business-like—'you see we could get a cottage a little way out of town for half what a city house would cost. Besides, everything is so much cheaper in the country and we could return to the city the coming winter. There!'

'But your pupils, Viva?'

'I could manage to give all the lessons in three days of the week; taking the train up, you know, is almost as cheap, and do work for Crumley the intervening days. Now mamma!' triumphantly.

'It looks plausible at first, my pet, but I'm almost afraid to hope. Dear, dear! how the boy does wear out his clothing,' she said.

Viva came over and clasped two maroon-clad arms around the invalid figure before her.

'Hope as much as you like, mamma, darling,' she cried, gaily, 'for we'll watch the papers till we see a treasure advertised 'cheap'—in italics, you know—and then—'

The rest was too glorious to describe.

Three days later Viva danced in, out of an April shower, with rose-red cheeks and starry eyes.

'Here it is, mamma,' she cried, enigmatically, with a hearty kiss and a laugh that almost demolished the small figure in the arm-chair.

'Now listen.'

And from the open paper of that morning she read aloud—

TO BE LET—In suburban village, twenty minutes ride from the city, an eight-room cottage, with garden attached. Cheap, to good tenant. Apply to Clifford Chandos, Room 12, Blank street, City.

'I'm sure this will suit—'cheap' in italics, as I said, mamma. You will have your happy countrified summer after all,' with an exultant little laugh. 'Now, for awhile, good-bye.'

'Where are you going, dear?'

'To see about this, mamma. Lessons are over—'

'Yes, but I do not quite like your going alone, Viva.'

'What! An old-maid music teacher like me? I almost have the dignity of age, in this voluminous waterproof and green veil. Green! Just think of it! I might as well have red hair and spectacles. My nervous old darling, I'll be back before you know I am gone.'

And with this decidedly sweeping but scarcely possible assertion, she was ont again under the drifting April sky, and going cityward as fast as the omnibus could take her.

In the thickest, busiest portion of the city, up two flights of dingy stairs went Viva.

A timid knock at room 12.

'Come in!'

She turned the handle and with the green veil well down, went in.

Two or three gentlemen, writing at baize-covered desks, looked up carelessly as she entered, and went on with their work.

A gentleman enveloped in clouds of cigar smoke, with feet considerably elevated above the level of his head, glanced towards the door as the graceful figure in the threadbare waterproof came timidly in the room.

Down came the feet, out went the cigar, and Clifford Chandos, pushing a chair forward, bowed gravely, questioningly, to the lady before him.

'I—I called to inquire about a cottage advertised.'

'The cottage? Oh yes, to be sure. Will you please be seated, and I will give you the particulars?'

And Viva taking the proffered seat, listened while the grave man, with straight black brows and keen kindly eyes explained the terms with pleasant courtesy.

And when she lifted the obnoxious green veil a moment, to conclude some necessary arrangement, Clifford Chandos started ever so slightly as he saw the pretty girlish face before him, as serene and dignified in its grave, business-like composure, as though its owner was eight and fifty, instead of eight and ten.

'When will we look at the place, Miss——'

'Rayner,' supplemented Viva.

'Miss Rayner. Shall we say to-morrow at one?'

'At two if convenient.'

'Certainly; two, if preferable.'

Then he held the door open as courteously as though she wore sealskin and diamonds, while with a quiet grace she bowed and passed from the room.

And Clifford Chandos went back to his chair, a softer light in his keen gray eyes, and actually, for once in his life, forgot to re-light his cigar.

The day came at last when, from the stuffy city house, the Rayners moved to the pretty roomy cottage, where honeysuckle and wild roses straggled at their own sweet will over roof and porch.

And Viva, coming home from the dusky city three evenings in a week, pale and tired, brightened and laughed her own happy laugh at the sight of her mother's face—growing young again—at the window, at the sound of Dick and Jessie's boisterous laughing.

It was curious all the repairing that cottage needed after they moved in.

It was more curious that their quiet, handsome landlord should insist on supervising it all himself.

He grew into their simple lives in those days.

Mrs. Rayner came to think the cheery voice better than medicine, the children to shout lustily at sight of him, and Viva to listen for the sound of his firm footsteps on the garden path.

One evening the soft May wind was swaying the 'lady finders'as the children call them over the door.

Viva snatched up her hat and strolled down to the pretty rustic gate.

Just a little more tired than usual, after a desperate struggle to teach an irritable, obtuse pupil the mysteries of crochets, and quavers, and demi-semiquavers.

She stood there, a fair, girlish figure, in her soft white dress, a great bunch of blue meadow violets at her slender throat and waist.

The scented wind gently loosened the dark-brown hair, and blew a fitful drift of rose-bloom into the pure pale face.

Very pretty?

Well, Clifford Chandos thought so at all events as he came along the uneven country road with his light, firm foot-fall.

'Good evening Miss Rayner!'

She turned suddenly, the faint flush deepening to carnation.

'Good evening, Mr. Chandos!'

I think a person can give a very tolerable shake hands without holding one's fingers quite a minute. But apparently Mr. Chandos thought differently.

'Miss Rayner, will you come for a walk—just a little way down the road? There is a place there I would like you to see.'

He asked pleadingly, hungrily, as though fearful of a refusal.

'Is it far?'

'No,' eagerly; 'quite near. Besides, Miss Viva, I have something to tell you, or rather ask you.'

They were strolling on.

She paused and looked up in vague alarm.

'To ask me, Mr. Chandos?'

'Yes. Viva, I want to ask you to leave Rose Cottage.'

Was he mad?

'To leave Rose Cottage!' she repeated blankly.

She stopped short, and looked up at him with brown bewildered eyes.

'Are you not satisfied with us as tenants? What will mamma say?'

'I did not ask your mother to leave Rose Cottage'—and his voice was trembling and low—'I ask you.'

'Me? Why, Mr. Chandos——'

She broke off abruptly as she saw the look in the eyes of the man regarding her.

Such a look as would make more successful wooers in the world to-day—a look of passionate love and resolute determination to have her in spite of herself.

'Viva, my darling—my darling,' he cried, all the mischief in his voice swept away in his fiery earnestness, 'won't you understand? I love you dearly, Viva, and I want you for my wife.'

'Yes, I understand,' she said simply.

'I am not a very rich man, dear, but I would give my life to make you happy.'

She looked up at him with bright outshining eyes, and though her cheeks flamed hotly, she said in her gentle, straight-forward girlish way—

'I would be honored to be your wife were you penniless, Mr. Chandos.'

'Mr. Chandos,' sternly. Little wife, say 'Clifford."

And her hand in his, she said it simply: 'Clifford.'

In a short time they paused before a massive entrance-gate and pretty Gothic lodge.

'This is the great place of the neighborhood, Viva. Shall we go up and have a look at it?'

They paused at the great stone steps of an ideal country-seat, stretching, verandahed, porticoed, with huge stone lions on gaurd at the door.

'Come in, dear!' holding out his hand, with a curious smile.

'But the owner?'

'I go with his permission.'

Then passing the servant at the door, he led her through rooms where the mighty touch of Midas was softened and made perfect by the mightier touch of taste.

Through a conservatory where birds and flowers were drowsily falling asleep, and marble statues gleamed palely forth from tropical dusky nooks.

'It's a handsome place, dear, isn't it?' he asked, when once again they stood beneath the darkening sky.

'Handsome? Oh Clifford!' with an ecstatic long-drawn breath.

'I hardly know how much rent I ought to charge you, little woman,' he said, quizzically, drawing her closer to him; 'but I'll be moderate. Suppose we say—one thousand kisses per annum.'

'Yours?' she gasped. You said you were not rich.'

'Well, I am not a Rothschild, love, but,' with a sudden change of tone, 'richer than all the world, sweetheart, in you.'

So, after all, Viva graces a home worthy of her.

And Jessie sententiously remarks—

"Twas well we moved.'

Aud Viva nods and smiles, as she slips her little sparkling hand into her husband's loving clasp.

The peculiar costume of the dwellers in Arizona is thus described by a 'tender-foot:' 'In ordinary weather he wears a belt with pistols in it. When it grows chilly he puts on another belt with pistols in it, and when it becomes really cold he throws a Winchester rifle over his shoulders.'

Men who join clubs find the dues to pay there, and the deuce to pay at home.

Sweet Evenings Come and Go.

Sweet evenings come and go, love,
They came and went of yore;
This evening of our life, love,
Shall go and come no more.

When we have passed away, love,
All things will keep their name;
But yet no life on earth, love,
With ours will be the same.

The daisies will be there, love,
The stars in heaven will shine;
I shall not feel thy wish, love,
Nor thou my hand in thine.

A better time will come, love,
And better souls be born;
I would not be the best, love,
To leave thee now forlorn.

WHAT A "LOST GIRL" SAID.

'Nan,' I said, 'there is everything waitin' for you if you'll take it. Won't you?'

'I don't understand it,' she remarked. Everythin's in a twist. Years an' years and never heard of God, and not a soul come near me to tell me about Him, an' all at once they say he loves me, and always has. Bah! If he loved me, and people think about it as they pretend, how dare they let there be such places for us to come up to? If God is what they say, He ought to strike the people dead that keep Him to themselves till it's too late for us ever to be helped. There! I won't talk about it. I don't care; all I want is quiet, and I'll have it soon.'

Poor soul! she couldn't breathe lying down nor sleep but a bit at a time, and it was awful to have her goin' on so, an' she not twenty!

I knelt down by her. She had a little room by herself, for she had some money yet, and I prayed till I could not speak for crying.

'Nan! Nan!' I said, 'you are goin' on to the next world, an' you've got to be judged. What will you do without a Saviour? Try to think about it.'

She patted my hands as if I were the one to be quieted.

'Don't bother!' she said, 'I don't mind, and you must not. If He is as good as you say He'll see that it's all right. I'm too tired to care; I only want to get through. There is nothing to live for. I want you to come every day, for it won't be long.'

She liked to be read to, but you couldn't make her believe, somehow, that any of it was real.

'I'd believe it if I could,' she said, 'but why should I? I don't see why you do. It sounds good, but it doesn't seem to mean anything. Why hasn't anybody ever told me before?'—Studies in the Slums.

The London Times is authority for the statement that the manufacture of bichromate of potash has a singular effect upon the nose. A little hole is formed upon the partition dividing the nostrils, and increases gradually till the partition entirely disappears, with the exception of its lower part, so that to a superficial observer there is nothing the matter with the nose, except a little outward depression. As soon as the partition is destroyed the process appears to stop there, neither the lungs, air tubes, nor throat being in the least degree affected. The early symptoms are a slight tickling of the part affected, followed by bleeding, but no uncomfortable feelings, and in fact, the destructive process is painless.

The sermon was duller than usual, and it was only here and there that a fully wide-awake member of the congregation could be seen, when a little fellow, whose uneasy twistings had aroused his father from a comfortable nap, piped up, in a clear, audible voice: 'Pa, what do we have to stay here for?' That simple childish question injected more animation into the members of the church on that evening than the pastor had aroused during his entire ministry.

The numerous suits for breach of promise recently instituted against old men by young women are having their effect. UNITED AFTER A LONG SEPARATION.

At the Bijou Theater on Saturday night there was a pair that attracted some attention. They sat on the north side of the house, midway between the aisles, about eight rows back from the footlights. There was nothing particularly striking about them. The man was rather insignificant in appearance. He was slight, a little undersized, with pale face and a Roman nose. He was dressed neatly in black, with a modest scarf, the only jewelry he wore being a scarf-pin and a plain gold chain. Under the seat he occupied lay a small straw hat, encircled by a plain black band. The woman was pretty, with a very graceful figure. Her dress was in excellent taste. It was black, and quietly but fashionably made. Her hat was a small round one, black and ormented with two or three feathers of a dark color. She wore little or no jewelry. In her hands, which were ungloved, she carried a blue and white feather fan.

The pair enjoyed the performance. They had evidently never seen 'Patience' before. They were intelligent enough to appreciate Mr. Gilbert's jokes, and they laughed at all of them as if they had never heard them. Yet their mirth was never boisterous; it was characterized by the same good taste as their dress. The two were not profuse in their attentions to each other, although the man would occasionally lean over toward his companion in an affectionate manner. They were evidently on the best of terms, but their bearing toward each other was rather that of a married couple than of two lovers.

When the last song had been sung and the curtain had fallen the couple left the theater with the rest of the audience. The woman did not take her companion's arm at first. At the door he stopped and lighted a cigarette. They then turned and walked down Broadway through the crowd. At Twenty-seventh street several painted women and loud-talking men unexpectedly brushed against the woman. She shrank instinctively from them, and took her companion's arm as if for protection.

'Do you know that couple?' said a young man just graduated from Yale, who was walking behind them with a friend.

'They are Blanche Douglass and Walter Malley.'—N. Y. Tribune.

AN AFFECTING SCENE.

Many hearts were moved the other night at a scene witnessed in the New York Central depot, upon the arrival of the train at 8 o'clock having on board a large number of emigrants on their way to new homes in the far West. On the way to this city it was discovered that a Swedish child of about eighteen months was very dangerously sick. On the arrival of the train the parents of the child were taken, with the little sufferer, and an infant, to the reception room. There it was ascertained that the little one was rapidly approaching the unseen shore. Sympathetic persons in the reception room gathered around the afflicted family to offer their services. But the emigrants could not speak nor understand a word of English, nor was there anyone present who could converse in their language. A physician was summoned by telephone, and until his arrival nothing could be done. In the meantime many eyes were moistened by the sight. The infant lay, or rather sat, fast asleep in a seat, its little head resting against the iron arm. In an adjoining seat was the father, with the dying child in his arms; its eyes set, its throat badly swolen and inflamed and face and hands begrimed with smoke and dust gathered on the train, making the paleness of the few spots of white skin that appeared through the dirt all the more striking. In front of the father stood the mother, gazing into the dying child's face, her own covered with dust and dirt, but presenting the very picture of despair. As the paroxysms of pain seized the little sufferer, causing it to writhe, the poor father would fondly lean over and kiss its soot-covered forehead, the great tears chasing one another down his cheeks, cutting furrows through the dust and leaving white streaks behind; the mother, in the meantime, tenderly stroking the little one's cheek and whispering loving words to her dying darling in language unintelligable to any but their own grief-stricken circle. The scene was truly an affecting one, and many were the expressions of sympathy that dropped from the lips of those who witnessed it. Dr. McBeth finally arrived and administered restoratives and ordered the entire family sent to the poorhouse.—Buffalo Commercial.

Great is the audacity of the young American. The latest instance of this fact is related by The Troy Times: 'The four-years-old daughter of a well-known divine of this city is disposed to be dictatorial in a cunning way with her older brothers and sisters. While she was acting the wee tyrant over her brother the other day, her father decided to rebuke her for the first time, and eloquently set forth to her the kindness of her brother and her duty to be kind in return. When the exhortation had ended the little auditor, with tearful eyes and frame trembling with emotion, strode up to her venerable sire, and striking an attitude, said between her sobs: 'Y-you use too m-many words.' The father vainly endeavored to suppress his laughter as he went to his study and proceeded to cut down his next Sunday's sermon.'

Thrilling adventure: 'Ah,' says Picquoiseau. 'I had such a shock the other day. My phaeton was coming down the Champs Elysees; crack! the horse runs away, knocks against a lamp-post, the coachman is thrown to the ground, the shafts are broken—' 'And you?' 'Oh! me! Luckily I wasn't in the carriage!'—From the French.

Johnny came home from school the other day very much excited. 'What do you think, papa, Joe Steward, one of the big boys, had an argument with the teacher about a question in grammar!' 'And what position did Joe take?' 'His last position was across a chair, with his face down!'

Aimee is coming back to America in the fall. Her voice is not as well proportioned as it used to be, but what is better, her ankle retains all its old time sweetness, compass and power.—Denver Times.

A lawyer said sneeringly to a clergyman: 'If I had a stupid son, I'd make a minister of him.' The clergyman thought a moment and then quietly replied: Sir, your father was not of your opinion, was he?'

It was a French woman who exclaimed, holding up a glass of sparkling fresh water: 'Ah, if it were only wicked to drink this, how nice it would taste!'

THE Republican State Committee meets at Boston to-day to arrange for the approaching State Convention.

CAMERON'S State Committee refuses to accede to the demand of the Independents, that the candidates of both factions shall withdraw before uniting in a new convention, so the fight promises to go on until election time and both sides are defeated.

THE members of the tariff commission have established their headquarters at Long Branch, where they can alternate a comfortable amount of indulgence in the pleasures of that popular resort with the consideration of the more weighty matters to be brought before them.

IT looks as though the star route prosecutions would fall through entirely, without any convictions. Considering the amount of bragging indulged in by the government lawyer, this is a humiliating result, and it looks as if the cases were not managed with any intention of securing convictions.

MRS. LINCOLN, widow of President Lincoln, died at Springfield, Ill., last Sunday night, of paralysis. Mrs. Lincoln was a Kentuckian by birth, and was devotedly attached to her husband, to whom she was married in 1842. His death was a terrible blow to her, almost unsettling her reason, and she has been in poor health for some years.

WHAT has become of that order President Arthur was to issue, telling government employes they need not fear dismissal for failure to pay campaign assessments? The congressional committee is turning the screws down still harder, and is notifying delinquents to hurry up with their remittances. They would be very glad to receive the President's assurance that the contributions called for are purely "voluntary" on their part.

THERE has been but little change in Egyptian affairs the past week. The English forces remain in possession of Alexandria, and Arabi is supposed to be some miles out, strengthening his army and preparing for a big fight. If Germany had been doing this business instead of England, Arabi would have been wiped out and the whole country overrun with troops by this time. A force of 20,000 men is to be sent to Egypt by the English government.

THE toy pistol is steadily moving to the front rank as the champion boy killer of the period. Some 30 deaths from lock-jaw have come to our notice since the Fourth, each one the result of wounds inflicted by this innocent-looking weapon, and it is safe to presume that the actual number of deaths from this cause in the country will largely exceed these figures. If parents will not do it, the society for the prevention of cruelty to children should take hold of the matter and see that the sale of the murderous implement is stopped.

FOR ONCE, at least, Gov. Long has "put his foot in it." It has been generally understood that he positively would not be a candidate for re-election, so the friends of other candidates have gone earnestly to work in their behalf. The other day, however, the Governor told a Boston Herald interviewer that "if the people, through the conventions, should see fit to place me in nomination for Governor or Congressman, or if the Legislature should elect me to the national Senate, I would accept." He confessed, though, that he thought Mr. Harris would be renominated and re-elected to Congress, and Mr. Hoar to the Senate, thus virtually saying that, as he probably could not get either of those places, he would take the governorship again. Gov. Long is not the first public man who has "given himself away" to an interviewer; but we are surprised that our usually level-headed executive should have put himself in just this position. Still, if he is ready to take a renomination, he will doubtless get it. The people may not approve his course in this matter, but will hardly set him aside for one mistake. He makes a capital Governor, Mr. Crapo an excellent Congressman, Mr. Bishop a first-rate presiding officer; and we might as well keep them in their respective positions for another term.

The final group intended for the National Lincoln Monument at Oak Ridge Cemetery in Springfield, Ill., is nearly finished at the Ames Company's Statuary Department at Chicopee, and will be ready for shipment about August 1. The figures comprising the group are heroic in size, and represent a dying cavalryman in the arms of a companion with drawn sword, and the frightened horse about to gallop off. This group is about 10½ feet high and weighs 5500 pounds. It has required about one year to do the work. The entire monument will cost $206,550.

A new phase of the labor movement has developed at Rochester, N. Y. A labor combination having stopped work in a certain shoe factory because the employer would not take back two men who had been troublesome to him, the Employer's Protective Association, numbering 168 individuals and manufacturing firms of all trades, has notified all labor union employes in their establishments that their services will be dispensed with after a certain date until the difficulty in the shoe factory is settled.

A new trotting circuit has been established by the Hampden Park Association of Springfield, and the Beacon and Mystic park associations of Boston and Medford respectively, and Springfield will have four days of racing, Sept. 5—8, the others following a week apart. HIGH SCHOOL EXHIBITION.

The annual exhibition of the Palmer High School on Thursday evening brought out an audience which nearly filled Wales Hall. The order of exercises was as follows: Prayer by Rev. O. R. Hunt; chorus; colloquy, Edward Lacey and Stever Knox; piano solo, Lena M. Brown; recitation, Helen L. Robinson; declamation, Michael W. Kelliher; violin solo, Minnie H. Baker; recitation, Cora E. Brown; piano solo, Anna L. Fisherdick; Latin dialogue, Joseph A. Thompson, Henry A. Loomis, Myron H. Lawrence, Harry H. Brown, Arthur J. Holden; vocal duet, Emma C. Mulvihill and M. A. Thompson; essay, Minnie H. Baker; piano duet, Lena M. Brown and Kate E. Sanderson; declamation, George S. Holden; song, Cora E. Brown; chorus. The music, both vocal and instrumental was furnished by members of the school, and was executed in a very creditable manner. The violin solo by Miss Baker, the piano solos by Misses Fisherdick and L. M. Brown, and the vocal duet by Misses Mulvihill and Thompson were all well rendered, the vocal duet meriting special attention. The choruses were drilled by Mrs. A. E. Park. The beauty of the decorations of the stage was largely due to the principal, Mrs. E. L. Davis, and to citizens, who kindly placed plants and flowers at the disposal of the school. A Shaksperian colloquy by Messrs. Lacey and Knox was well rendered. Both M. W. Kelliher, who gave an impassioned declamation in behalf of Ireland, and George Holden, who preached a hardshell sermon, were highly appreciated. Miss Helen L. Robinson gave a pleasing recitation, while especial mention is due to Miss Cora E. Brown for the elocutionary skill displayed in the recitation "The High Tide." A pleasing delivery added greatly to the good thoughts of Miss Baker's essay. The Latin dialogue was unique and called out a good deal of puzzled merriment. Lawyer Strong of the school committee, at the invitation of the principal, made a brief address expressing the thanks of the committee and of the audience to the members of the school for their good school work and creditable exhibition. He stated that the present principal, Mr. Whitney, ably supplemented the good work of former principals, and that the progress of the school was now such that an assistant teacher would probably be engaged at the beginning of the next school year, and that the school was rapidly coming to a state of efficiency worthy of the best support of our citizens. He referred to the raised standard of the school as a reason for the absence of a graduating class this year.

The next school year begins the first Monday in September, and indications point to an increased attendance.

WEST WARREN.

C. N. Gilbert, the new proprieter of the hotel, has put out a new sign.

Furniture Dealer J. B. Sibley has just put up two new signs. It will well pay a person to visit his rooms, as the stock is as good as can be found outside of the city, and the prices will compare favorably with city prices.

The Congregational society gave a lawn party on Chas. B. Elwell's grounds last Wednesday evening. The grounds were very prettily decorated with Chinese lanterns, and the whole affair was a success. The society netted about $28.

The people are well pleased with the success of the Rocket base ball club, which has played with the Three Rivers, Thorndikes, and Ware Clippers, and not lost a game so far. Last Saturday the club played the Three Rivers on the Thorndike grounds, beating them 3 to 2 in a fine and hotly contested game, neither side scoring until the sixth inning. They play the Ware Clippers to-day, and a good game is expected. The club has been unable for some reason or other to arrange games with the East Brookfields, but would like very much to do so.

THORNDIKE.

The river is remarkably low, considering the amount of rain in the early part of the season.

Tenements are greatly in demand in this village. Every house is occupied, and some are densely packed.

The old Thorndike boarding house is reopened after its unfortunate history, in a manner alike creditable to the new proprietor and the Company.

The Thorndike Co. is developing considerable æsthetic taste—not of the Wilde stamp—in fixing up the grounds around the mills, which adds much to the appearance of the corporation.

The intensity of the heat does not dull the building enterprise of this village. F. S. Breard is putting up a small stone building; Mr. Ramsden is building an L to his house, and E. H. Libbey has bought a building lot of Jacob Stever, opposite the Packard estate.

Many of our people are looking toward the mountains and the seashore. Miss Lizzie Wilson has just returned from several weeks' vacation at Cummington. The Congregational church will be closed during the four-weeks' absence of the pastor at Saratoga and Old Orchard Beach.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The Collins Paper Co. are laying about 40 rods of pipe to the cove, from which they will draw spring water for manufacturing purposes.

Water in the river is low for the first time this season, and the grain mill has stopped in consequence. Should the dry weather continue they will have to use steam.

A small band of serenaders contrived to make Monday night hideous with their horns and drums. They visited "Sodom" in the early part of the night, returning about one o'clock, to take up their "sleep-dispelling" strains, when they evidently lost their bearings and became demoralized.

In the game of ball last week the boys did the best of the season. They out-batted the visitors, and Lenahan's pitching puzzled them throughout the game. The visitors made but 5 base hits, while the home team made 23, and six 2-base hits. But very few errors were made throughout the game. The following is the score:

Innings,	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
North Wilbrahams,	0	0	4	0	4	3	4	8	0	—23
Holyokes,	0	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	—1

Time of game—2 hours and 30 minutes.

The North Wilbrahams now challenge any club of paper makers throughout the State.

WALES.

The hay crop is being gathered in very rapidly, and will average equal to last year.

One of our old landmarks has gone, in the death of F. L. Burley, who died Thursday morning.

Willie Herring fell from a load of hay the other day, and stuck the tine of a pitchfork through his arm above the elbow.

The Methodist society are to be congratulated upon the fine appearance of their vestry, since Charles E. Smith completed his painting there.

Warren Shaw and A. F. Fisher went to Mashapaug a day or two ago and returned with 14 black bass as the result of their skill in the piscatorial art.

Somebody threw a stone through the south window of the Baptist parsonage about nine o'clock Tuesday night. Was it an accident or for mischief? is the question.

Among the curiosities in town is a tame coon that was caught last year when very small. He is a large one now, and quite playful with his master, but does not enjoy strangers' visits.

H. W. Royce, of Chicago, who is here visiting friends, has proved himself a man of strong qualities, judging from the large pile of stone he has got out from the grounds around his old homestead.

H. M. Needham has put in a couple of brown stone hitching posts in front of his residence, making an improvement from the wood ones taken up. Dea. Shaw has done likewise, and completed the line.

While Mrs. Luther Baker sat at work the other day a rifle ball struck the house, went through the side and through a partition, and lodged in the ceiling of another room. It is about time that some of the boys who make a practice of shooting their guns at random were made an example of. They would do well to remember that there is a heavy fine for discharging firearms in the direction of a dwelling house. This was a case of shameful carelessness, as the ball passed very near Mrs. Baker.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Geo. Buckwheat has closed up his barber's shop in Sheldon's block.

The Otis Co. are making some changes in the press room, and are putting new stoves in their bleachery.

Notwithstanding the heat, King Solomon R. A. Masons have held two extra meetings this week for work.

The Methodist mission is doing a grand good work in district No. 9, and some religious interest is prevalent.

We are glad to state that Dr. Richardson is on the gain, and we hope before long to see him again upon our streets.

The French had a very enjoyable dance at Firemen's Hall Thursday evening, under the management of M. Joseph Loplam.

Miss Mary Kennedy gave an address at the Methodist church last Sunday evening before the woman's foreign missionary society.

The survivors of the old fighting 32d Mass. Regt. are talking of holding a reunion here. Our citizens will give them a royal welcome.

Miss Wood, recent assistant in the high school, has accepted, it is said, a position as teacher of Latin and mathematics in a young ladies' seminary at Philadelphia.

S. W. Bangs, who was taken suddenly ill on Monday, was so as to ride out on Wednesday. "Dame Rumor" did not hit the mark this time regarding his serious illness.

The "Top of Ware" school house has become decidedly good looking with its new coat of paint. Other school buildings will in turn receive attention during the vacation.

Mrs. Donaldson, who resides on Park avenue, had a very narrow escape from death by the overturning of her carriage Monday evening at the corner of Main and Church streets.

Winfield Gates, government storekeeper and gauger at Atlanta, Ga., is home on a visit among his friends. Rev. E. P. Gibbs of Hudson also made a flying trip to Ware this week.

To-day the Clippers play the Rockets at West Warren. We trust they will retrieve their lost laurels. The Firemen will probably play in town, either with the Three Rivers nine or the Actives of South Barre.

Prof. H. M. Tyler, of Smith's College, Northampton, will preach to-morrow at the East Congregational church, and the Sunday following Rev. A. H. Plumb, of the Walnut avenue church of Boston, will officiate.

The village improvement society will soon commence their labors. It is to be hoped that if they do anything at all to the sidewalk in front of the Unitarian church they will lay a good concrete walk with a nice curbing.

Stephen B. Witherell is still alive, and has not forgot how to manage a big picnic. He is now planning for a grand affair soon at Hoyt's grove, to include canoe races, boat races, a ball match, etc. Particulars in full next week.

A little boom for Hon. Lewis N. Gilbert for Congress has been started by some of our politicians. Mr. Gilbert would make a strong representative for this manufacturing district, and would do himself and the State great honor if he could secure the election.

On Saturday last the East Brookfield Resolutes played a very close game with the Firemen, but were defeated by a score of 7 to 5. We give the score by innings:

Innings,	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Firemen,	0	0	0	0	3	0	3	1	0	—7
Resolutes,	0	0	1	0	2	0	0	1	1	—5

Though late in the day, we offer our congratulations to Ware's old high school principal, C. E. Garman, who has been made assistant professor of moral science at Amherst college. Prof. Garman has been announced as one of the lecturers at the Concord School of Philosophy.

Benj. O. Sandford, for several years a resident of Ware and a son-in-law of Daniel Sandford, died the 11th inst. at Augusta, Me. During the late war he enlisted in a Maine regiment, and was wounded in the head, which for many years affected his brain and eventually caused his death.

Ware is drawing its usual number of city summerers, and we notice that many familiar faces are away. Editor Eddy and family left Tuesday morning for Hingham, East Weymouth and the coast. They drove across the State by way of the line of the Mass. Central, and will return by a different route. A pleasant trip and lots of photograhic views!

At the next regular communication of Eden Masonic Lodge, M. W. G. Master Samuel C. Lawrence and suite will pay a fraternal visit. They will also be accompanied by D. D. G. M. Cochran and suite of Sturbridge. Most Illustrious Grand Master John Haigh has also sent word to Washington Council that he will visit them in September next, and inspect the work of all the criptic degrees.

Will the babe born this week ever live to see the completion of the Mass. Central? The finishing of the road to Ware is a "consummation devoutly to be wished," and Ware cares but little whether the Nashua & Worcester, Fitchburg, Old Colony, or Boston & Lowell road secures control of the Central; whether old bonds become "preferred stock," or what is done, so long as the road once reaches this town.

Hoyt's grove has been thoroughly prepared for the reception of parties, and nearly every day more or less pass some time in its precincts. On Saturday last a party of Good Templars spent the evening there and on the lake. This week a pavilion 36 by 20 feet has been erected. The under part will be used for a dancing room, while in the second story are six sleeping rooms, designed for those who wish to spend the night in the grove.

Rivalry is the spice of life, and when it can be carried on to the detriment of none it is a good thing. Just now our local shoemakers are disposed to render lasting services to mankind. Our attention has been called to some excellent work done by A. E. Cooper during the past week, and we can truly say that $7.50 is "dirt cheap" for a pair of nice hand-sewed calf boots made to measure. Surely he has learned that the nimble penny often turned insures the dollars, and small profits and quick sales render business lively.

The latter part of August or the first of September, Crusade Lodge of Good Templars propose holding a mass temperance picnic at Hoyt's grove. Twenty lodges of Good Templars, besides various other temperance organizations, have been invited to join in the festivities. Gov. Long, G. W. C. T. Stevens, Mrs. Leonard, the G. W. Sec'y, and many other prominent speakers have been invited. It is proposed to have the largest temperance gathering ever held in this region, and we trust nothing will nip it in the bud.

Here is a choice extract from the Troy (N. Y.) Times, a "Stalwart" sheet: "Garfield was not the spontaneous choice of the Chicago Convention; but owed his selection to a compromise which was almost in the nature of a conspiracy to thwart the will of a large plurality at least in the Republican party."

A cloud of flies so swarmed about the steeple of a church in Detroit the other day as to produce the appearance of smoke, and the fire engines were called out.

A Gardner man got his wife insured for $10,000 in the Penn Mutual Company recently, and she died of apoplexy three days after the policies were delivered.

The doctors are more than usually busy, and a good many children are sick.—Sunday Republican.

Which is the cause, and which the effect?

Magazines, Etc.

In the North American Review for August, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher writes of "Progress in Religious Thought," pointing out the many influences, social, educational and scientific, which are by degrees transforming the structure of dogmatic belief and teaching; T. V. Powderly, the official head of the Knights of Labor, the strongest union of workingmen in the United States, contributes a temperance article on "The Organization of Labor;" the well-known British military correspondent, Archibald Forbes, writes of the "United States Army." "Woman's Work and Woman's Wages," by Charles W. Elliott, is a forcible statement of one of the most urgent problems of our time. The author sees no advantage to be derived from the employment of woman in man's work, whether of brain or of hand. In a highly interesting essay on "The Ethics of Gambling," O. B. Frothingham analyzes the passion for play with rare ingenuity. "The Remuneration of Public Servants," by Frank D. Y. Carpenter, gives matter for serious consideration, both to civil service reformers and their opponents. Finally, there is a paper on "Artesian Wells upon the Great Plains," by Dr. C. A White, of the Smithsonian Institution. The Review is sold by booksellers generally.

We have received from M. C. Stebbins & Co., of Springfield, the publishers, a neat pamphlet containing the sermon of Rev. Noah Porter, D. D., and the historical discourse of Rev. Dr. Buckingham, on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the South Congregational church of that city. The book also contains steel portraits of these gentlemen, the only pastors the church has had, with pictures of the old and new churches, and interesting historical data.

Harper's Magazine for August, in addition to a fine frontispiece, a full-page illustration, has two bright summer articles—both splendidly illustrated—"Some Western Resorts," by John A. Butler, and "The Cruise of the 'Nameless'," by Barnet Phillips. Col. T. W. Higginson contributes "The First Americans," an entertaining and instructive historical paper—the first of a series which is to give a continuous history of the United States down to the close of Jackson's administration—profusely illustrated. Mr. Lathrop's fourth paper on "Spanish Vistas," in which he introduces his readers to Andalusian delights and the Alhambra, is attractive summer reading. Miss Alice R. Hobbins introduces "Some Worthies of Old Norwich," Geo. M. Dawson has an interesting sketch of the Queen Charlotte Islands, and the wonders of the "New Northwest" traversed by the Canadian Pacific Railroad are depicted by T. E. Pendergast, with a good map. An important article relating to the perils of navigation in the North Atlantic—icebergs and fog—is contributed by J. W. Shackford, Captain of the Illinois. Dr. A. A. Lipscomb has an able article on "The Uses of Shakspeare off the Stage." The number contains three strong short stories: "A Rebel," by Julian Hawthorne; "Laquelle?" by Mrs. R. B. Gustafson; and "A St. Augustine Episode," by Miss A. R. Macfarlane. Poems are contributed by Edgar Fawcett and William Winter, and the editorial departments maintain their usual vigor.

The August Atlantic Monthly has two features which will specially commend it to general attention, namely, a fine new steel portrait of Mr. Emerson, accompanied by an admirable article by W. T. Harris of Concord, and supplement containing a full account of the Birthday Garden Party to Harriet Beecher Stowe, with the addresses, poems, and letters. In addition to this, the number contains an entertaining travel sketch, "Across Africa," by Charles Dudley Warner; another installment of the "Studies in the South;" an entertaining short story, "Some account of Thomas Tucker," by Rose Terry Cooke; additional chapters of the varied and engaging serial stories, "Two on a Tower," by Thomas Hardy, "Dr. Zay," by Miss Phelps, and "The House of a Merchant Prince," by William Henry Bishop. Dr. Holmes contributes a characteristic, delightful poem, entitled "At the Summit," apropos of Mrs. Stowe's birthday. There are other essays and poems, reviews of the most important recent books, and a fine variety in the Conributors' Club. Altogether, the number is one that every lover of the Atlantic will especially value. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

The citizens of Pownal, Vt., were thrown into a great state of excitement the other day by the appearance of a huge black bear on the main street. People scattered in every direction, and Bruin had everything his own way until one brave man sallied forth and shot him. Then there was great rejoicing, until two Italians came along, whose oaths were fearful to hear, when they found that their means of support had been removed.

Ten million young oysters were planted in New Haven harbor Friday, as an experiment. The oysters were two days old, and were contained in a four quart pail filled with water. They could only be discovered by the aid of a magnifying glass. The experiments are for the purpose of ascertaining at what time the young oyster must be put into the water to enable it to attach itself to the shells or other substances on the bottom.

The armor plating of the British men-of-war engaged at Alexandria is very varied. It is as follows: Alexandria (flagship), 13½-inch thick armor at the most vital parts; Inflexible, 24 inches thick; Temeraire, 12½ inches thick; Superb, 13½-inch iron plates; Monarch, 8½-inch thick armor; Invincible, 9¼-inch armor.

Hon. Lyman Barnes, a prominent lawyer of Wisconsin is believed to have been killed by alligators in Florida, where he was staying for his health. He left his hotel a few days ago to cross a swampy piece of land infested with alligators and wild animals and has not been seen since.

Bartholdi, designer of the statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," to be placed in New York harbor, is a man of great wealth, and has given $20,000 of his own fortune to defray the expenses of constructing the huge monument.

Farm laborers are said to be so scarce in Montana that $40 and $50 a month is in vain offered for them. Farmers are forced to let their cows browse about on the meadows with full udders, because they cannot get help to milk them.

The foreman who superintended the laying of the faulty switch which caused the Long Branch Railroad disaster has been committed to jail to answer to the charge of manslaughter.

Governor Plaisted and Governor Long, with their respective staffs, are to attend the reunion of the Maine Veterans of Massachusetts at Calais next month.

During the month of June the Boston and Albany delivered to the New York Central at Albany 9315 freight cars and received 8754.

The "Country Week," conducted under the auspices of the Boston Young Men's Christian Union, enters upon its eighth season with the present year. Through its instrumentality, 6700 children, and others from among the city poor, have since its inauguration in 1875 been enabled to visit for a week or longer in country homes, a pleasure which they could not otherwise have enjoyed. Aside from the pleasure which is afforded by these short visits, the moral advantage of the change in surroundings and influences is incalculable. "The children return with improved health, strengthened constitutions, and new and better aspirations." The Committee have already entered upon the list for the present season the names of over 2000 children; and they ask those living in the country, to whose notice this article may come, who are willing to aid in the work by inviting one or more children to visit their homes for a week or ten days during the summer, to send their addresses and the number of children and ages preferred to the Secretary, Miss H. G. Putnam, 17 Boylston Street, Boston, who will cheerfully furnish any information desired. The committee pay all expenses of sending and returning children to and from the homes.

An out-of-door representation of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is given in a Providence garden, part of which has been transformed into a Southern plantation, with cotton fields, negro quarters, St. Clair's mansion, &c. "Eliza" makes her escape across a real lake on a raft, followed by a pack of nineteen blood-hounds.

The city authorities of Lockport, N. Y., have just discovered and destroyed $250,000 worth of city bonds, signed and sealed, which had been carelessly left in one of the banks of the city and forgotten by the bank officers and city officials. They were issued in aid of a railroad project which has been abandoned.

The top of a fence in an inundated tract in Illinois reached just above the water, and for days every post and board was piled high with snakes, endeavoring to save their lives.

Boston had a heavy thunder shower Wednesday afternoon, 1.28 inches of water falling in half an hour. Considerable damage was done in cellars and basements.

It is estimated that Boston people pay $500 a day for spring water. A man selling water by the glass from a wagon in a good position will sell 1500 glasses a day.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work," Sold by druggists. 1y19

AN OPEN LETTER.

SOME OUTSPOKEN STATEMENTS OF GREAT VALUE FROM PARTIES OF THE HIGHEST STANDING.

When the people of America become so thoroughly aroused, and on a subject of such serious importance as the preservation of their lives and health, it is but natural that the ones who have been largely instrumental in the origin of this movement should speak frankly and directly to the people most interested. It is for this reason that we thus come before the public and make the following revelations.

Every careful observer who has sought to keep pace with the march of events has noted the alarming increase of certain peculiar physical troubles within the past few years. These troubles come at unexpected moments and in a most treacherous way. They have manifested themselves in innumerable forms, but they have always had the same cause. They have not afflicted the minor parts of the body, but have gone direct to the strongholds of the system and their work has usually been as prompt as it has been fatal. Their treacherous and deceptive nature has often prevented a careful analysis of what causes them, and, as a result, intense suffering and final disaster have usually ensued. The real cause, however, has been a derangement of the kidneys, and all of these troubles are, in fact, the first symptoms of the terrible Bright's disease, which has cast its dark shadow over so many homes in the land and is increasing wonderfully and continually. It is now conceded by the ablest physicians in every land and by eminent scientists the world over, that this disease is the result of blood poisoning. This poisoning is brought about by wasted and unhealthy kidneys that permit the poison to remain in the blood, instead of throwing it from the system. But it is equally evident to all who have studied into the effects and have become conversant with the facts, that a disordered state of the kidneys and liver produces most of the common complaints and pains which afflict the human race, and they can be traced to this source just as certainly as can Bright's disease. To purify a stream we must go to its source, and to cure a disease we must remove the cause. It being true, therefore, that nine-tenths of all human ailments are caused by diseased kidneys or liver, the only certain way to cure these troubles is by treating the organs which cause them. How intimately the kidneys are associated with the entire system may be understood from the fact that over 1000 ounces of blood pass through them every hour, being more than 200 gallons, or nearly one ton in the course of twenty-four hours. This vast mass of living fluid is sent to every part of the body, and if the kidneys are diseased the impurities that are in the blood are not removed, and hence pass through the veins, carrying disease in some one of its many terrible forms. The horrors which accompany most of the diseases caused by disordered kidneys or liver cannot be described in print, while the dangers surrounding them are even greater than the agony. And yet a person may be troubled for months without knowing the cause of the diseases that have attacked him. Some of the symptoms of the first stages, any one of which indicates disordered kidneys or liver, are these: Pains in the back and around the loins, severe headaches, dizziness, inflamed eyes, a coated tongue and a dry mouth, loss of appetite, chilly sensations, indigestion (the stomach never is in order when the kidneys or liver are deranged), a dryness of the skin, nervousness, night sweats, muscular debility, despondency, a tired feeling, especially at night, puffing or bloating under the eyes, etc. If any of the following things are noticed about the fluids passed from the system, it shows that the kidneys and liver are out of order: A red deposit, a scum upon the surface, an unusual thickness or thinness, a very dark or a very light color, a burning sensation in passing, an unusual odor, a retention, or a frequent desire to void and inability to do so.

The above are a few of the hundreds of symptoms which indicate the beginning of aggravated cases of kidney or liver difficulties, and they require instant attention. If these symptoms are not checked at once, they are almost certain to result in some one of the many terrible diseases of the kidneys. But unpleasant as all the symptoms and even these diseases may be, they are as nothing compared to the last stages of the complaints. The kidneys waste away by disease, accompanied by intense pains; the heart becomes uncontrolable; the lungs are oppressed; the eyeballs grow glassy, and the entire system is reduced and debilitated. For weeks before death comes the sufferer looks forward to it as a blessed relief, and anything that can furnish even temporary help is gladly hailed. Then it is that bloating begins; the face becomes puffy and pallid; the breath can only be caught in gasps, speech is impossible and muscular action suspended. The patient finally sinks into a state of unconsciousness to everything except the pains which are racking him, and death comes by certain but slow degrees. There can be but one conclusion which all readers of care and judgment will draw from these facts, which is the necessity of treating the disease in time, and by that means which has been proven the best and most efficient.

It has been our privilege to treat more cases and effect more cures of this terrible complaint than has ever been known before in the history of the world. The wonderful sale which our remedies have attained is due wholly to the fact that they have cured the ones who have used them. The power and value of any remedy must rest wholly on a basis of worth, and here is just where our Safe Kidney and Liver Cure has found its wonderful power and success. But in this connection comes one important fact: It has always been true that articles of merit are subject to imitations. No one seeks to counterfeit the bills of a worthless bank. The productions of a cracked inventor or witless writer are never copied. It is just so with a healing remedy. If it possesses no merit it will not be subjected to imitations. If, however, it has power and value, imitations will spring up on every side. While it is a tribute to the value of this medicine that it has imitations, still, in justice to those who are suffering, we feel that all should be warned against them.

There is but one known remedy that has ever been able to cure serious kidney troubles or control these great organs when once deranged, and that remedy is Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. There are numerous nostrums on the market claiming to be just as efficient and some which even claim to be the same. The test of merit, however, is in what has been accomplished, and we therefore say unhesitatingly that for all diseases of the kidneys, liver and urinary organs, Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure stands alone, not only in point of excellence, but in the wonderful results it has achieved. In order to successfully avoid the purchase of spurious and injurious medicines, observe these facts: Our remedy is put up in dark amber glass bottles, with the Safe (our trade-mark) blown in the back. A private proprietary six-cent internal revenue stamp is affixed to the neck and covers the top of the cork, and is of a light brown color. In the middle thereof is a Safe in outline, and on it the picture of a negro gathering herbs. If this stamp is not found on every bottle of the Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, or if there is any evidence that it has been tampered with, and if a Safe is not blown on the back of the bottle, reject the bottle at once, and insist on having a genuine one.

We are led to publish the foregoing in order that the public may know and realize just where we stand. We have always sought to keep our personality from obtruding upon the public, knowing full well that the value of our remedy was the essential thing, but the unexampled use which has been made of this medicine, and the volumes of letters we are constantly receiving demand a personal statement from us. We are justly gratified at the confidence which has been shown us, and thankful for the myriads of cures our remedy has performed, and we pledge ourselves for the future as we have endeavored in the past, to furnish the best and only valuable remedy that can control and cure all the many and terrible troubles arising from disorders of these great organs.

Sincerely, H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Rochester, N. Y.

Sometimes, the man who wants to be a wit has his weapon turned against himself. At a great dinner, an eccentric clergyman saw a huge dish of cresses, and drawing it in front of him began the work of destruction. The ill-mannered company laughed, and one of them said with a sneer, 'Dr. McC., you remind me of Nebuchadnezzar.' The old gentleman looked slyly out of a corner of his eye, and replied: 'Ay, man, so I remind you of Nebuchadnezzar, do I? Well I think it must be because I am eating among the brutes.'

A Michigan man who was pursued by a bull escaped a probably terrible death by spitting tobacco juice in the animal's eyes. On the strength of this the Detroit Free Press advises: 'Don't let anybody make you believe that tobacco is unhealthy"—apparently forgetting that it was very unhealthy for the bull.—Norristown Herald.

'A good-looking girl never dies of a broken heart,' says a French proverb. Nobody expects her to, any more than they expect a homely man to die of a broken suspender.

TOADS IN THE GARDEN.

While volumes are written in favor of birds as destroyers of insect life, rarely is a line written in favor of the faithful toad, who will destroy more insects injurious to vegetables in the garden in one day than a whole flock of birds will in a week. We calmly look on with folded arms, and see the robin or cat-bird select our largest and best strawberries that we intended for exhibition, because we are informed that these birds destroy large quantities of insects; but when we find that a toad has dug under one of our strawberry plants we instantly declare war and execute the death-penalty; or, at least, transport the victim for life, without the slightest investigation to ascertain for what purpose he has dug under the plant, and without the least suspicion that he is after the enemy, which, if not caught, will destroy the plant. It is true that the toad does not fill the air with charming music, nor does his form and color delight the eye as that of the oriole; but he is quiet, modest and unassuming, never robbing man of the fruits of his labor, but quietly passing by the choicest and most delicious fruits, or only stopping to catch a bug or a fly that is sipping the richest juices of the fruit. If there is one living animal that we should encourage to stay in the garden, it is the toad; because his whole diet is of insects; he is ever on the watch like a cat for a victim; and he secures his principal harvest in the night when the worms are abroad. Is it not reasonable to suppose that the great increase of insects in our garden is caused by the decrease of toads more than it is by the decrease of birds? It is a fact that may have escaped the attention of some, that toads in the garden are not as numerous as formerly. The cause of this decrease may be in consequence of our more frequent stirring of the soil with improved implements. When only the hand-hoe was used the toad had time to get out of the way, but the wheel-hoe moves so rapidly that he is often caught and killed. In portions of Europe, gardeners not only take especial care of the toads in the garden, but frequently buy to keep the stock good. Underground shelters are made for the toads by covering a small hole with a board or shingle; this practice might be imitated by American gardeners. A garden well stocked with toads would be greatly protected from many of the insects that are now so destructive to many kinds of vegetation.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

FORESTALL THE GRUBS.—A handful of salt scattered around the body of the peach tree, twice or three times a year, especially in May and August or even September, at the North, will do much to keep out grubs, and if the wash water made on wash days were thrown around fruit trees it would help their growth and keep out the grubs. A splendid way to utilize the wash water is to throw it on to the coal ashes, and at the close of each season put a shovelful or two around each tree. You that have young peach trees see to it now that all grubs are cleaned out with a sharp instrument, then whitewashed with a wash made of strong wash water and lime, and plenty of the wash water and coal ashes thrown around the tree, and twice through the season a handful of salt scattered around the tree.—Fruit Recorder.

Time, the day after graduation, on which occasion Araminta delivered the valedictory address, with essay, entitled 'On the Threshold,' containing such lovely things about taking up our burden of life with earnestness and doing even menial duties with alacrity and thoroughness. 'Now, Araminta,' says her practical mamma, appearing with a large basket in her hand, 'as you have crossed the threshold I should like to have you—' (Interruption by the 'sweet girl graduate.') 'Now, mother, if it's any horrid old stockings to darn I ain't a-going to touch them, so there now,' and Arabella burst into a fit of hysterical weeping at this first cruel assault from the cold world upon which she has just entered.

Pat was sitting at a restaurant table and heard a man give an order to a waiter to bring him some gumbo soup. 'Do you hear that, Moike? He's calling for Jumbo soup.' 'Phat's that?' asks his companion. Pat cast a disgusted look at him as he answered: 'Shure have ye bin in the country tin years and don't know the name of b'iled iliphant whin ye hear it?'

FOUNDED BY GORDON M. FISK.

A BRAVE LADY.

SHE ENDURES THE PAIN OF A SEVERE SURGICAL OPERATION WITHOUT TAKING CHLOROFORM.

(From the Courier.)

Mrs. Schoonmaker, of Creek Locks, Ulster Co., New York, had the misfortune to entirely lose the sight of one of her eyes, through an accident, and endured painful inflammatory action therein for two long years; the other eye finally becoming sympathetically affected, her general health seriously suffering; indeed, she was a mere wreck, a walking skeleton. In this terrible strait she consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who told her at once that the injured eye must be removed. She quietly but firmly said, "All right-Doctor, but don't give me chloroform. Let my husband sit by my side during the operation, and I will neither cry out nor stir." The work was done, and the poor woman kept her word. Talk of soldierly courage! This showed greater pluck than it takes to face a hundred guns. To restore her general health and give tone and strength to the system, Dr. Kennedy then gave the "Favorite Remedy," which cleansed the blood and imparted new life to the long suffering woman. She rapidly gained health and strength, and is now well. The "Favorite Remedy" is a priceless blessing to women. No family should be without it Your druggist has it. If not, send to Dr. Davi, Kennedy, Rondout, New York. 4w17

A KISS IN THE DARK.

'Won't some one mark my lines for me, please? My quilting looks very much like Mrs. Partington's turpentine walks,' and Mary Norris raised a pretty, laughing face to the assembled company, which consisted of the elite of Brownsville, with some of the lower strata. The little village boasted not of its numbers as it did of its pretty girls, and Mrs. Goodwin was resolved to have her quilt finished by fair means or foul,and being desperate, had scraped Brownsville for her quilting bee. The usual gossip was at its height when it was interrupted by the appeal of Mary Norris to Mrs. Goodwin, whose interest it was to have every line perfect, and to keep the social machine in order. So she bustled about and soon got Mary to work again.

'I wonder,' said Jennie Haskins, 'if Mary Frazier is coming to-day?'

'Goodness knows! She is terribly fashionable and aristocratic,' replied one of the lower set.

'Oh, she is coming,'interrupted the hostess; 'she promised me not to fail; she is such a quiet, undemonstrative little thing that she will accomplish a good deal even if she does come late.'

'She wouldn't be fashionable and like city people if she came early as the rest,' put in another of the lower strata. 'For my part, I wish she would stay away entirely. We can live without such stuck up—'

The sentence remained unfinished, for at that moment the lovely face of Miss Frazier looked in upon them with a pleasant smile. In her quiet manner she had glided in at a side door, removed her hat and gloves without disturbing the hostess, and then surprised them. Mrs. Goodwin greeted her warmly and as usual, with much fuss and bustle, she was seated at the quilt, where her slight, deft, fingers, as Mrs. Goodwin had predicted, soon began to trace line after line in her exquisite and neat fashion, and to out-do many who had come earlier.

All the people who could be picked into pieces were, and Brownsville had to pass through the social feminine mangle customary upon such occasions and yet strange to say, survived. After tea, the gathering of the rustic swains began. Among them came Dr. Collins and his bachelor friend, Dr. Peters.

Of course the entire unmarried portion of the other sex were setting their caps for the young physician, and were doing all they could to increase his vanity and spoil him generally. Upon the present occasion he joined right merrily in the country games, romped with Mary Norris and paid more than one forfeit upon her red pouting lips. Indeed , he seemed to revel in sweets, for most of the girls, though making a show of resentment when he kissed them, evidently sought or challenged such liberties, all but quiet Mary Frazier. She stole into out-of-the-way corners, and more than once slipped out of the hands of those who sought to drag her into their plays. It was whispered again that she was too aristocratic to mingle with the common herd, though in truth, from having been reared in the city, she was unprepared to permit such liberties. Her extremely delicate nature shrunk from becoming public property. Her lips were reserved for him who should win her love, but were not to be desecrated. But that she had cast longing eyes upon the young physician was not to be denied. Yet, even the most careful observer had not been able to detect the fact —a higher color or sudden bounding of the heart at the sound of his voice, when he addressed her in tones deferential and polite, as if he was just a little frozen or awed by her manner.

Mirth reigned fast and furious as the evening waned. Chairs were overturned in the boisterous game of blind-man's buff, while dresses and sashes suffered sadly. The doctor seeing Mary Norris dash out of the front door, followed her, resolving (on the spur of the moment) to seize the time to disclose his love. Such an event had been one of the things of the future, if at all. Until now he had not given much thought to it, but her saucy black eyes and sweet warm kisses had completed his enthralment. Out under the vine-covered porch of the Goodwin cottage where he could distinctly trace the soft outlines of his love in her fleecy-white dress, he followed, and gaining her side whispered:

'Mary, I must leave now. I have a patient to visit yet to-night; but I cannot tear myself away without telling you how much I love you.'

One little hand was clinging to the trellis as he spoke, and dimly tracing the coveted member, he forcibly possessed himself of it, while his arm stole around her slender waist. With an air of timid surprise, all unlike the usual spontaneous demonstrativeness of Mary Norris, the young girl dropped her head and murmured:

'I—I did not think—'

'You did not think I loved you! Is that it, my sweet girl? Well, I do most sincerely. But, Mary, I am no adept at love-making,and I am very brusque. Yet, will you be my little wife?'

'Surely you cannot mean it. You have never shown me the slightest preference,' was whispered back as her head dropped still lower.

'Never shown the slightest preference? Is it possible that under my careless and light exterior you did not detect a more serious meaning? But I am awaiting my answer,'and he bent down to catch the timid 'Yes.'

The night was moonless and dark, so much so that the doctor could not see, as he longed to do, the blushing face of his Mary. He kissed at random; and being determined to leave the seal of betrothal on her lips, kissed first her forehead and then her cheek, and after mean dering all about, at last settled upon her sweet lips, which were turned temptingly upward.

'God bless you!'he whispered. 'To-morrow evening I may come and see you, I suppose, and then we can adjust our happy, happy future.'

Just then the shouts of some lasses who had been chased out of the back door and around the gravelled walks by their rustic admirers, startled the lovers. Dr. Collins kissed his affianced again and dashed away before he was discovered. Of course he 'walked upon air' and it is quite likely his prescriptions for the invalid were a little mixed. But after he had gained the quiet of his own room, he lay awake for a long time, reflecting upon the stupendous step he had taken. Somehow he half regretted that he had been so hasty,as he communed with himself.

'I am afraid,' he thought, 'that my mother and sisters will think her a bit hoydenish. But it cannot be denied that she is beautiful and shrewd, and if transplanted into a more refined soil will improve. How she seemed to melt when she found I loved her, and how changed were her manners. I confess I expected her to accept my wooing with her old time, half defiant, saucy flash. But lo! she became sweetly, womanly, tender and gentle. I could feel her pliant form tremble and thrill in my arms, and her timid 'yes' was given almost with a sob. By Jove! I had no idea that the child loved me so much, and I shall always be good to the sweet girl. She shall be the very apple of my eye.'

With this resolve Dr. Collins floated into dreamland, to rehearse over again the love passage in the rustic porch of Mrs. Goodwin's and between the twining glory vines. The following day passed for him with leaden feet. He longed to see Mary Norris in her new character of his affianced bride. That she would be gentle and sweet with him, now that they were engaged, he did not doubt, and he felt he should like her better when a trifle toned down. So the early shadows of the evening found him at the door of the Norris mansion. Mary was at the piano. He could distinguish her voice in some peculiar strain. No doubt this was only a ruse to cover her natural confusion. A servant showed him in, and he instantly discovered that Mary was not alone. A masculine friend from a neighboring village was devotedly leaning over her and turning over the music. The closing of the door announced him. Mary started up from the instrument, and without the slightest deepening of the roses on her cheeks, and as simply and naturally as ever came forward, greeted him, and introduced 'her friend, Mr. Cummings.'

The hot blood surged into the cheeks of the doctor, and he attempted to express his disappointment and ardor by one eloquent glance; but it fell entirely short of its mark. No answering expression came back to him. As if unconscious of their new and dear relation to each other, Mary Norris ran on in a merry jest and raillery, until he became thoroughly out of humor and espoused the contrary side of the question, and at an early hour took his departure. When in the hall, where the girl accompanied him, he turned upon her with words of reproach.

'How could you admit that fellow to-night when you expected me?'

'I beg your pardon, Dr. Collins,' she replied,with her saucy black eyes dancing;'you are very much mistaken. I did not expect you to-night, and 'that fellow' is one of my dearest friends.'

'Mary, are you trifling with me? Have you forgotten what transpired on the veranda last night?'

'What veranda?'

'That of Mrs. Goodwin, to be sure.

'You must be insane, Doctor, or are laboring under some hallucination. I was not on Mrs. Goodwin's veranda with you last night for a single moment;and if you made any engagements with any young lady at that time and place, it was not with your humble servant.'

'Not with you?' he gasped, pale to the lips. 'Who in the deuce was it, then, I'd like to know?'

'I can't say. You should not be so careless, doctor. No doubt some fair Brownsville girl is this moment looking her eyes out while you are staying here wasting time with me. But I must go back or Charley will be jealous. Yet stay. I have one little trifling bit of confidence for you. We are engaged.'

'Certainly. Don't I know it?' he exclaimed, seizing her hand, with a radiant face.

'Knew it, and had the audacity to call my Charley a fellow! and to be angry because I did not deny myself to him on account of your stupidity in thinking that under Mrs. Goodwin's porch you had informed me of your intended visit. Oh! goodness what a coquet you must believe me to be.'

His hands fell away from her's suddenly, and his voice was husky, as he answered:

'I congratulate you. Good-night.'

Out in the silent and dull village street, he ground his teeth, and used some very intricate and harsh words against himself; the worst of which perhaps was that he might be considered an 'ass.' He went directly to his office, and Dr. Peters noticed the change in his manner and kindly asked what was the matter.

'Any bad news my boy,' he asked jocosely. You look as though you had been having a case of double conniptions, and did not know what to do with them.'

'I am an unmitigated fool, that's all. I've gone and engaged myself.'

'To be married? Not that, hey?'

'Yes, just that, old fellow,' and he sank into the chair with a most disgusting air.

Dr. Peters looked at him for a moment and then burst into an uncontrollable fit of laughter.

'Why the deuce take it,' he said, as soon as he could get his breath, 'one would think you were doomed to be hung. I give you my word that if I had gone as far as you say you you have, I should try and look more cheerful.'

'Good heavens how can I? Listen for a few moments. As I said before, I am engaged to be married, but I swear to you I don't know to whom!'

The old physician sat up, his face suddenly elongated and he stared at his partner in pills with open-eyed astonishment. Presently he said to himself: 'The boy is as mad as a March hare.

'No, I am not—I wish I was.'

He related minutely everything that had occurred under the porch and screening vines at Mrs. Goodwin's and continued: 'Whoever I mistook for Mary Norris evidently believes in and loves me. She solemnly yielded herself to my caresses as my betrothed wife, thinking that I worshiped her, and her only.' Dr. Collins groaned and ran his fingers through his hair, until each particular fibre stood on end. His partner vainly attempted to control his risibles. One glance at the disconsolate visage of his friend was too much, and his laugh being loud and long, shook the foundation of Browsville, and it was a good half hour before he could sufficiently control himself to give his friend the comfort and advice he needed.

'No doubt,' was the reply, 'it is a laughing matter, and the ridiculous side exceedingly funny. And now, as a gentleman and man of honor, what am I to do?'

Dr. Peters wiped his eyes, settled himself to considering for a time before replying, and then said:

'If I were in your place, I should first find out to whom I was engaged, and if she proved agreeable, I should marry her, unless my heart was firmly set on Mary Norris.'

'Fortunately that spell is broken. I see that I was merely infatuated. Besides, I find that she is already engaged. But that does not matter now. Suppose I find the young lady the reverse of my expectations and hopes, what shall I do then?'

'Make yourself so generally disagreeable and exacting that you drive her to the extremity of jilting you.'

'That advice is very sound, no doubt, but how in the name of common sense am I to find the girl?'

'You would make a poor detective. Evidently her name is Mary. If I understood you correctly, you called her that alone with a few epithets thrown in.

'I had not thought of that.'

'Well, think over all the girls in Brownsby the name of Mary, and the one most likely to be she. There is Mary Carter—'

'It wasn't she,' interrupted Dr. Collins, with a gesture of disgust.

'How do you know? Remember you proposed in the dark.'

'Don't you think I should know if I was hugging a saw log? Didn't I tell you her form was slight and delicately moulded?'

'Oh, if you had occular demonstration of the fact, I yield. Might it not have been Mary Lewis?'

'No, she is too tall.'

Then clearly, it is as I suspected—Mary Frazier, and I congratulate you, my dear boy, for having so stumbled upon a happy fate in the dark. She is, without doubt, the dearest little woman in the world, and a perfect lady withal.'

The handsome face of the young physician cleared, and he reddened visibly, as he answered:

'I hadn't thought of her other than to admire her gentle and sweet manner and radiant, intellectual face. Somehow she is always so reticent and retiring that I found it rather hard to get on with her.'

'If you had been better read in the ways of women, this alone would have convinced you that she was more interested in you than she was willing to acknowledge, even to herself.'

'A thousand thanks, Doc. I confess that you have helped me wonderfully, and if it is indeed the lovely Mary Frazier to whom I am affianced, and by whom I believe myself greatly beloved, I will try not to be wholly miserable.'

The next evening, according to the advice he had received, Dr. Collins called upon Miss Frazier. As she arose to greet him, a sudden uplifting of a pair of soft brown eyes, and upsurging of the tell-tale blood convinced him that he was upon the right track.

'Of course,' he said, taking her hand and looking down into her timid and blushing face, 'you expectected me last night?'

'Certainly; and I presume I ought to give you a lecture for not coming,' she replied, smiling sweetly through the roses.

"I most surely deserve it. But you are aware one is never sure of a physician. His time is not always at his own command, and you must be confident that pressing engagements keep me from this dearer one.' He blushed as he said the words, though he found no hard task to again seek the lips of the lovely girl. Dr Peters, Mary Norris and 'her Charley' danced not many months afterward at the wedding of Mary Frazier and Dr. Collins, who could not help drawing comparisons between the two, and most favorable to his own sweet gentle wife. And as the years go by he never ceases to thank fate for the rare gift bestowed upon him in the dark.

MANLINESS.—Does manliness consist in—Swearing?
Smoking?
Drinking?
Playing pool?
Staying out at night?
Loafing around saloons?
Disobedience to parents?
Jeering at old people?
Being 'too big' for church and Sunday school?
Ridiculing the Bible and religion?
Persons usually outgrow and become ashamed of these foolish ideas unless they are comfirmed loafers. If they do not, their descent is very rapid to all that is evil. Boys, have you any of these symptoms?

Says the Detroit Free Press:—A young man in a train was making fun of a lady's hat to an elderly gentleman in the seat with him. 'Yes,' said his seat-mate, 'that's my wife, and I told her if she wore that bonnet that some fool would make fun of it.' The young man slid out. At the next station the old man poured out his hot coffee in the saucer to cool. 'Look, ma,' said a snickering girl, 'at that old-fashioned way of drinking.' 'Yes,' said the elderly gentleman, 'and it was old-fashioned manners not to notice it.'

The symbols of the invisible are the loveliest of what is visible.

Faith.

God holds the key of all unknown,
And I am glad;
If other hands should hold the key,
Or if he trusted it to me,
I might be sad.

I cannot read His future plan,
But this I know—
I have the smiling of His face,
And all the refuge of His grace,
While here below.

Enough, this covers all my want,
And so I rest:
For what I cannot He can see,
And in His care I sure shall be Forever blest.

GOING TO THE POST OFFICE.

One of the oddest sights in the South is to see the negroes hang about the post offices. They are the first ones to call in the morning and the last to leave at night, and it is by no means rare to have them inquire for mail fifteen times a day. I was in the office at Mariette, Ga., when an aged darkey limped in and inquired:

'Am dar fo' or five letters heah for Junebroke Duke?'

'No, sir,' replied the postmaster, after taking a look.

'Well, den, I'll take one.'

'There are no letters for you.'

'Isn't dar a newspaper?'

'No.'

'Hasn't I dun got nuffin' 'tall?'

'Not a thing.'

'Dat's curus—werry curus,' muttered the man as he walked out.

I followed after, and when I asked him if he expected an important letter that day, he replied:

'Sartin I does. Dat's why I'ze walked fo' miles dis mawnin'.'

'Where was the letter coming from?'

'I dunno.'

'Who did you expect to write to you?'

'I dunno.'

'Did you expect news or money in the letter?'

''Deed I did, sah. I 'spected dat letter might hab $20 into it.'

'Who from?'

'I dunno, but I 'spected it.'

He then told me that he could neither read nor write, had no friends to write to him, had never mailed a letter nor received one in his life, and yet he had inquired for mail at least five hundred times a year for the past ten years. In fact, it wasn't an hour after I had left him before he circled around to the office again and said:

'I reckon I must hab some mail by dis time.'

'No—nothing for you.'

'Wall, if that hain't curus—verry curus! Reckon I'd better wait for dat one o'clock train!'—Free Press.

HEALTHFULNESS OF LEMONS.

When people feel the need of an acid, if they would let vinegar alone and use lemons or sour apples, they would feel just as well satisfied, and receive no injury. And a suggestion may not come amiss as to a good plan when lemons are cheap in the market. A person should, in those times, purchase several dozen at once, and prepare them for use in the warm, weak days of spring and summer, when acids of lemons and ripe fruits are so grateful and useful. Press your hand on the lemon, and roll it back and forth briskly on the table, to make it squeeze more easily; then press the juice into a bowl or tumbler—never into tin; strain out all the seeds, as they give a bad taste. Remove all the pulp from the peel, and boil in water—a pint for a dozen pulps—to extract the acid. A few minutes' boiling is enough; then strain the water with the juice of the lemon; put a pound of white sugar to a pint of the juice; boil ten minutes; bottle it, and your lemonade is ready. Put a teaspoonful or two of this lemon syrup in a glass of water, and you have a cooling, healthful drink.

DOES PROHIBITION PROHIBIT?—'Prohibition does not prohibit, because men sell liquor and get drunk where prohibition exists,' say the friends of license.

Suppose we use the same argument in other matters; for instance:

Christianity does not Christianize, because there are sinners in the world.

Wisdom doesn't make wise, because fools are still to be found.

Cultivation doesn't cultivate,because weeds still come up in the field.

Education doesn't educate, because it does not exterminate the ignorance that persists in such silly arguments as the above.—Worth County (Iowa) Index.

The vase of a woman's love when once shattered can never be mended. You can patch up a run-down boot, but it is not that way with a woman's love. THE TOY PISTOL.

The toy pistol, which is doing such deadly work, slaying more, probably, than the weapon of which it is an imitation, is one of the most innocent looking articles that was ever manufactured and put on the market to be purchased by a confiding public. It is made of a composition metal; it is about three inches in length, with scarcely more than the outlines of a pistol. Its barrel is not bored, nor has it any more of the machinery of a lock than is necessary to hold a hammer up and to drop it smartly. Where a nipple would be on an ordinary firearm of its nominal class is a tiny cup, in whose centre is a projection, which holds in place the substance to be exploded. This matter is a mere shred of paper, technically called a cap, loaded with an explosive that, when struck, produces a sharp detonation, the only recommendation, but a strong one to noise-loving youth, that this murderous thing has. The pistol is so small and so light that it can almost be hidden in the palm of the hand. If it were larger the risk incurred by its use would be much diminished.

Lockjaw, or tetanus as it is more exactly called, which seems to be the almost inevitable result of a wound inflicted by this toy, is a dangerous spasmodic disease marked by paroxysms of muscular contraction, which may succeed each other at varying intervals for days or weeks. Ragged and punctured wounds such as the toy pistol produces, in parts well supplied with nerves, like the palm of the hand, which is commonly the point injured by the so-called plaything, are more commonly causes of tetanus, which is usually first developed in the muscles of mastication, and then is extended to the muscles of the trunk, and to those of the extremities. In acute cases death is common in from two to five days. Just what tetanus is is not known, but recent investigations seem to indicate that it is caused or accompanied by inflammation of the spinal chord. It is attended by fever and extreme exhaustion, and it is affected by atmospheric conditions, which have not been clearly defined. It has been treated successfully by chloral, hydrate, opium, chloroform, and by speedy separation or removal of the nerves irritated by the wound, but it remains a pathological problem that has not been satisfactorily solved.

The Legislature of the present year enacted that a City Council or a Board of Selectmen may, with the approval of the Superior Court, adopt rules and regulations in relation to the sale or use of toy pistols and all other articles in which explosive compounds of any kind are used, or of which such compounds form a part; that they have not to any great extent taken advantage of this law, or that what has been done under it has been ignored, the many accidents reported and the numerous deaths resultant from them, are strong proof.—Boston Journal.

The manufacture of boxes in which the strawberry is brought to market has become a specialty of vast extent. A few years ago berries were brought in small willow baskets, but now we have boxes made of splints and supposed to hold a quart. This manufacture originated in Delaware, where it has become a leading business, a half-million being made annually. They are sold at $6 per thousand, and either 'full quarts' or 'short quarts' can be obtained. The same factories turn out immense quantities of splint peach baskets at $10 per hundred; also splint grape baskets at the same price. Butter boxes $6 per thousand are also among the novelties of this specialty.

A Western editor offered a prize of $50, and a year's subscription for the best written proposal of marriage from a lady. So she decided to remain single.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JULY 29, 188[illegible].

WAYS that are dark, if they ever existed in Springfield, are now wholly of the past. The electric light has done the business for them.

CONGRESS still remains in session, but does not appear to be transacting any business of importance to the country. The prospect now is that the hot weather, if nothing else, will drive the members to an early adjournment.

BY the way, are not our Berkshire friends altogether too modest this year? Hear them: For Governor, Byron Weston of Dalton; for attorney general, J. M. Barker of Pittsfield; for councillor, Wellington Smith of Lee, and for president of the senate, Frank Rockwell of Pittsfield. Congressman Robinson it seems is not to be disturbed.

IT is evident that Marshal Rice of Springfield is not appreciated by the defiant law-breakers of that city. Otherwise they would not rejoice so immoderately at his apparent misfortunes. Has he not been in all points tempted as they are? and for this reason is he not all the more likely to be touched with the feeling of their infirmities?

WAS it not rather ungenerous in Gov. Long to reconsider his determination not to accept a renomination, without such notice to the various proprietors of little "booms" as would enable them to dispose of their property without embarrassment? There is the Springfield Republican's Crapo boom, so fondly nursed and tenderly cared for, and now its young life so suddenly blasted. The ordinary sources of consolation seem altogether inadequate. Such grief can only be assuaged by tears.

A FAVORING blast upon the bugle horn of Theodore C. Bates to the extent of a two-colum letter to the Boston Sunday Herald is this week's contribution to the Bishop boom. Bishop and Bates are both experienced legislators—were both members of the retrenchment committee of '79, and are both ardent advocates of civil service reform. The qualifications of these gentlemen for any office would thus seem to be perfect. It is now in order for Bishop to give Bates a send-off for attorney-general.

A WESTERN Massachusetts senator, who had closed his first term of service with that long and weary night of unrequitted vigilance at the post of duty, on retiring to the peaceful slumbers of a private citizen the following night gave his family imperative orders not to call him until the coming fall, and not then even unless he was re-elected. When our genial Lieutenant Governor "skipped out" on the eve of an election so deeply affecting his personal interests, did he leave any such instructions with his friends?

THE numerous strikes which have occurred in various parts of the country during the past two months do not turn out to be nearly so disastrous as there was at one time reason to anticipate. In many instances a compromise has been effected to the mutual satisfaction of all parties, and in others the strikers have been compelled to return to work without securing any advantage whatever. In prosperous times like the present, difficulties of this kind are sure to adjust themselves without any occasion for a resort to violence.

THE Republican State committee met at Boston Saturday last and fixed upon Wednesday, Sept. 20th, as the date of the coming State Convention. Geo. F. Hoar of Worcester was chosen to preside, in recognition of a long prevailing custom of giving the retiring senator the advantage of so favorable an opportunity to define his position and conciliate a friendly regard. The chairmanship of the committee on resolutions fell to Congressman Robinson of Chicopee—a most excellent selection in every respect, provided he can restrain his natural waywardness on the subject of woman suffrage.

The Land of the Pharaohs.

Before the opening of hostilities the Egyptian war cloud was altogether too small to occasion serious alarm. England's grievance was seemingly too trivial to afford any justification for a resort to arms. She demanded redress, and when the demand was refused the bombardment of Alexandria offered the only means of bringing the defiant rulers to terms. The city made but a feeble defense and the walls of her fortifications were soon battered to the ground. Then came the flag of truce, the cessation of hostilities and the well-planned escape of the very man whom alone England was fighting to subdue. For days then the city was given up to lawlessness and crime. Violence, pillage and plunder were supplemented by the torch, and for a time the fated city seemed upon the verge of absolute destruction. Order was last restored, but the preparations for war were prosecuted with greater vigor than ever before. Arabi, supported by a considerable army of faithful followers, has now entrenched himself in a portion of the country peculiarly adapted to defensive warfare, while England is marshaling her forces to an extent which indicates that she has at last come to understand the magnitude of the job she has undertaken. This in brief is the history of the Egyptian war to date. But the end is not yet. Arabi has been declared an outlaw, and the Khedive has proclaimed his dismissal from the Egyptian service. Dissension among the Egyptian rulers will bring anarchy in its most terrible form among her people. The other great powers of Europe are watching the movements of Great Britain with something more than idle curiosity. The problem may yet be solved in the interests of peace, and thus a deluge of blood be happily averted. A little time will doubtless determine.

LATEST FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.

Early Thursday morning Arabi's forces commenced active operations. They moved out of Abukir in large numbers, nearly the whole force being put in line, in the direction of Ramleh, and as soon as they came within range of the British lines opened fire. The Egyptian soldiers were well arrayed and did excellent service. At first the British stood firm and resolutely returned the fire of the followers of Arabi, but this was of short duration. The fire of the Egyptians was too hot for the Englishmen, and they broke ranks and fled, making the best of their way back within the intrenchments of Ramleh under the protectian of the guns of the fleet. The British left forty killed upon the field, besides a great number of wounded.

Arabi has proclaimed a holy war, denounced the Khedive as a traitor to Egypt, that he has been purchased with Christian gold, and is now engaged in the attempt of turning over the land of Egypt to Christian speculators. He has ordered that any one caught within his lines with a copy of the Khedive's proclamation offering amnesty to returning rebels shall be declared an outlaw and shot.

It seems doubtful if Arabi continues upon the aggressive; but it is evident, from well authenticated reports, that tremendous energy is being shown within his lines, and that he will soon be in a position to at least withstand the attacks of as large an army as England will dare to send to Egypt. His forces are being augmented greatly every day, and all the enlistments are for a holy war. The soldiers are perfectly loyal to him, and there are no dissensions in his ranks.

THE abundance of the crops is conclusively shown by reliable reports from all sections of the West. The acreage of the grain crop has been greatly increased over that of previous years, while the average yield per acre is regarded as almost unprecedented. Wheat, a large portion of which is already secured, is in excellent condition, and corn is too far advanced to sustain serious injury between now and the approaching harvest. With no Presidential election to agitate the country for some time to come, a foreign war to enlarge the demand for our products, peace at home and business confidence firmly established, our people may reasonably anticipate a season of prosperity beyond anything which in recent years they have been permitted to enjoy.

THE star route cases are dragging along at Washington, and the governmeat lawyers have this week redeemed their pledges by the introduction of some very damaging testimony against the defendants. Cook, Ingersoll, et. als., are evidently convinced that they have business on hand of a very serious nature. At any rate little is heard now-a-days of the brag and bluster which marked their conduct in the earlier stages of the trials. The Republican party is wise and sagacious in exposing the frauds of its public servants and bringing the guilty to punishment whenever convictions can be possibly secured. It is a matter of regret, however, that so many rascals are constantly turning up.

PROHIBITION appears to have appropriated H. Greeley's advice to the young man and gone west. It long since abandoned Massachusetts, and in all the other New England States where it pretends to have an abiding place its actual existence is a matter of grave controversy. But it has gone west and no mistake. In several of the States it has received a hearty welcome, and appears to be making friends and gaining grounds every day. We have no doubt it will do the people good. We look for the day as not far distant when it will be duly installed again by the legislature of the Old Bay State.

THE prize fighting era seems to have dawned again. As the leading sensation in the exhibition line, Barnum's Jumbo was expected to easily stand at the head. The prestige of this wonderful attraction has now become seriously impaired in view of the recent performances of Bruiser Sullivan and Tug Wilson. These noted pugilists maul and pummel each other to the intense delight of an immense New York audience, and wealth flows in upon them in proportion as their fame increases. Cannot Barnum be prevailed upon to enforce the law upon these dangerous rivals, purely as a measure of self-protection?

LUKE POLAND of Vermont, ex-Representative to Congress, and ex-U. S. Senator, has just been re-nominated for the House by the Republicans of the second district. Uncle Luke has been practically retired from political life since 1874, and his return is an event upon which the Republican party throughout the country may reasonably congratulate itself. His brains and brass buttons are sure to make themselves felt—even at his advanced age.

JONATHAN ALLEN, the impressible Irish lawyer at Holyoke, has again come into notoriety by getting himself arrested for violating the order of Mayor Crafts, prohibiting the use of Hampden Park after 10 o'clock at night. Allen was roughly handled by the pugnacious policeman who had him in custody, and the citizens generally seem to side with him on the merits of the controversy. The legal aspects are to be considered by the courts.

IT now turns out now that George William Curtis has been maliciously libelled. He was publicly charged with giving aid and comfort to the Republican party through the medium of a moderate contribution to its campaign fund. This charge was wilfully false. Mr. Curtis did nothing of the kind. We rejoice that this foul blot upon the good man's name has been so promptly and effectually removed.

Miss Fannie Parnell, sister of Charles Stewart Parnell, died suddenly in Bordentown, N. J., Thursday afternoon of last week, from paralysis of the heart. She was 29 years of age.

A Celtic citizen remarked the other day that "Arrah-be-Aisy" was making it warm for them over beyant there in Agypt.

There will be no preaching at the Baptist church during August, as the pastor, Rev. O. R. Hunt, will then take his vacation.

An excursion from Palmer, Belchertown and Amherst, went to Mt. Toby over the New London Northern Railroad yesterday.

Will some one invent a pocket clothes wringer? Nothing so injures the handkerchief as having it wrung by hand all the time.

The New London Northern railroad is now running Pullman palace cars in connection with the boat train between New London and Montreal.

Olney Fuller, of Clinton, Wis., formerly a merchant and lumber dealer at Bondsville, is spending a few weeks among his friends in this town.

W. C. Dewey's "C. B. & Q. Charlie," a trotting horse of considerable local fame, has been sold to Louis Merrifield of Worcester for about $700.

A lot of emigrants, bound for the West, passed through this place on the "modoc" Monday evening, and another installment on Thursday evening.

Palmer has a base ball club at last, one having been organized the past week. They are ready to hear from any of the clubs in the surrounding towns.

The Boston Journal says there is a dwelling house in Marion that has been 17 years unoccupied. We have several in Palmer which were never occupied.

A correspondent wants to know "why cider made and sold by a saintly farmer should inspire (?) a husband with the same savage ferocity as that sold him by a sinner of a rum-seller?"

The Assessors give notice in another column that they have delivered the tax list to Collector Northrop, and a discount of five per cent will be allowed on all taxes paid on or before August 20.

Rev. James L. Hill who occupies the pulpit of the Congregational church to-morrow is one of the ablest and most popular preachers in the city of Lynn. He comes here simply as a supply and not as a candidate.

The hay crop in this section is now nearly harvested, and has proved to be much better than was anticipated early in the season. The crop appears to be quite up to the average, and so far as heard from there is no decline in the price.

The Palmer telephone exchange has been extended so as to include Drs. Ruggles and Holbrook and D. F. Holden at Three Rivers, and Clark & Hastings and the Thorndike Co. at Thorndike. Connection has also been made with the wire mill.

James Healey, who recently purchased the blacksmith shop on South Main street, comes well recommended. He needs no introduction to our readers, having been associated in former years with the late Geo. A. Hunt. Attention is called to his card in another column.

Miss Lena Brown celebrated her fourteenth birthday Wednesday afternoon and evening by a lawn party on the grounds of S. R. Lawrence. The day was warm, but the occasion was much enjoyed by all present. Miss Lena was the recipient of many pretty and useful gifts.

One of our grocery clerks was on his way home from a delivery trip to a neighboring village the other day with his thoughts intently fixed on something besides his driving, and so when the horse stumbled and fell he rather unceremoniously descended, "all in a heap," so to speak.

The alterations which the town voted to make in the high school house will soon be commenced and pushed vigorously to completion. They will contribute very much to the external appearance of the building, and add to the convenience of the school rooms, as well as secure the safety of the scholars in case of fire.

During the week the Improvement Association have put in three new cross-walks, one from the corner of French's Block, across Pleasant street, and one across Central street on the north side of Pleasant, the other being across Park street from Lawyer Taft's residence to the Universalist church. Let the good work go on.

The editor of this paper is now away on a two-weeks' vacation. He could not be prevailed upon to take the JOURNAL with him, so the printers have kindly consented to remain at home and look after things in his absence. This is a pretty trying time with us, and our friends must understand that for this reason we have taken the pledge for fourteen days.

Considering the large number of deaths resulting from the "toy" pistol, which have occurred in different parts of the State during the current month, Palmer is fortunate in having escaped a single accident of the kind. It surely is not because there were none of the little boy-killers used here on the Fourth. To the juvenile mind they appear to be absolutely essential to a proper observance of the day.

John Keefe of Monson has been in the habit of drinking cider obtained from the neighboring farmers, but this not being quite strong enough for him he came to Palmer Monday, and returned home pretty well filled up. He began abusing his wife, who is a harmless insane person, and was complained of before the district court. Tuesday he was brought up for trial, and paid fines and costs to the amount of $17.50.

Sheriff Northrop, with his patent tongs grappling a hunk of ice which actually weighs so much more than you would imagine to look at the little thing, is a welcome visitor to every house in the village these intensely hot days. Herbert, this is your opportunity to make a first-class impression. Now don't be foolish and upset it all by thrusting unwelcome tax bills under the noses of your generous patrons. The Christian fortitude of sweltering humanity should not be put to any such test.

The committee on public charities of the last Legislature, of which Dr. Holbrook of this village was a member, feeling that they had left undone one thing at least which they ought to have done, took occasion last Wednesday to visit the charitable institution on Deer Island, in Boston harbor. The committee dined at Young's, and exchanged official courtesies with Gov. Long at Hull. They will make no formal report, but it is understood that everything they saw and did met with their unanimous approval.

The purpose for which the town meeting of next Monday is called would seem of itself to be rather a trivial matter for a whole town like this to be called upon to consider. The new addition to the school house in Three Rivers has been completed, and of the appropriation therefor the building committee find themselves with a few hundred dollars remaining in their hands. It is now felt that the whole building can be more economically and satisfactorily warmed by steam than by stoves, as has heretofore been done, and that no more favorable time will ever be found to introduce the system. The committee had no authority to make this change, and the balance of the appropriation was insufficient for that purpose. To ask the town to pass upon the question was therefore the only wise course to pursue.

Supt. Tufts has commenced the erection of a new hospital at the Primary School, to be 50 feet long by 22 feet wide, and two stories high. It is intended for patients whose diseases require that they should be kept isolated from other inmates of the institution who require hospital treatment. The school and farm buildings have all been newly painted and look decidedly fresh and clean. White is the prevailing color, but the pig pens are an exception. Not with any view of depriving the pigs of their favorite hue, but because the appropriation fell a little short. By the way, at the meeting of the trustees the present month, Superintendent Tufts and Dr. Holbrook were both re-elected to their respective positions for another year. The superintendent has also been appointed by Gov. Long a delegate to the annual meeting of the national conference of charities and corrections to be held at Madison, Wis., commencing Aug. 5th.

After the game was over it was found that the first umpire had money bet on the game, hence the partiality of his decisions.

It is stated that some of our dealers in illegal drams are in the habit of having their goods shipped to Gilbertville, and then brought from there to town. A week ago to-day over 150 of our citizens went over to West Warren to witness the game of ball between the Clippers and the Rockets. How long has keeping hens on one's own grounds and in one's own hen-house been a nuisance in the sight of the law? One of our citizens has been notified that his henhouse is "a nuisance, and detrimental to the health" of his neighbors. Have citizens no rights at all? It seems to us that such a notification as the above is straining the law very hard. Certainly it will not tend to neighborly feelings. We say to all our readers: Leave the law to those who are its devotees, live in peace with all mankind, see to it that you are blameless in all respects before you blame your neighbors.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years

HOW TO SECURE HEALTH.—It seems strange that any one will suffer from derangements brought on by an impure condition of the blood, when SCOVILL'S SARSAPARILLA AND STILLINGIA, or BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP will restore perfect health to the physical organization It is indeed a strengthening syrup, pleasant to take, and has proven itself to be the BEST BLOOD PURIFIER ever discovered, effectually curing scrofula, syphylitic disorders, weakness of the kidneys, erysipelas, malaria; all nervous disorders and debility, bilious complaints and all diseases indicating an impure condition of the blood, liver, kidneys, stomach, skin, etc. It corrects digestion. A single bottle will prove to you its merits as a health renewer, for it ACTS LIKE A CHARM, especially when the complaint is of an exhaustive nature, having a tendency to lessen the natural vigor of the brain and nervous system.

BAKER'S PAIN PANACEA cures pain in man and beast. For use externally and internally.

DR. ROGER'S VEGETABLE WORM SYRUP instantly destroys worms and removes the secretions which cause them.

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it, Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

Bedtime.

Tell you a story? Dear me!
And which one shall I tell?
How Tommy Green, in cruel sport,
Dropped pussy in the well?

Shall I tell you of Dame Hubbard's dog,
And the wonderful things he did;
Or of poor Bo-Peep, who could not tell
Where her wandering sheep were hid?

Or shall I tell of the dreadful wolf
Who met Red Riding-hood;
Or will you hear the sad, sad tale
Of the Children in the Wood?

Of Cinderella, who sat by the fire,
And wanted to go to the ball,
And the nice old godmother who came
With the glass slippers, and all?

Or shall I sing of the active cow
Who jumped right over the moon?
Perhaps she frightened the man up there
And made him come "down too soon."

Or will you hear of the famous birds
All baked in the royal pie?
I think we could make a better dish
With "a pocket full of rye."

What! baby mine, you are going to sleep,
And none of the stories are told?
The blue eyes are shut, and the pillow waits
For the touch of the curls of gold.

—Lucy L. Flemming in Harper's Young People.

A HINT TO COUNTRY READERS.

The tens of thousands of farmers who for for the last three or four years have turned their farms into summer resorts and themselves into boarding house keepers, ought to remember the old maxim that no man can follow any business without first serving an apprenticeship to it. They would find the summer boarder pay as well as crops of potatoes or corn, if they but knew how to treat him. But the misery of it is, they don't know and they won't learn. They began in boyhood to learn how to treat potatoes and corn, and consequently they were good farmers and made money with them. Boarders are a crop which requires peculiar management; they give it utter neglect. For the first two or three years most townspeople going to farms for the summer were forbearing to an extreme. They overlooked shortcomings, ate pork and last year's canned vegetables, and slept in unaired rooms and on stuffy feather beds without a word.

The usual policy of the farmer is to send off the best produce of the farm to market, and to put wife and children on starvation diet; to grow rich by saving pennies. He has begun by pursuing the same policy with his boarder, who has been patient, hoping he would in time learn his business. It is time he had learned it if he means to make it profitble in the end. Let him study the habits and tastes of the man he ought to please; sow early vegetables in the waste of ground about him; provide modern beds; look to his drainage; use the same energy and means to suit his patrons that the town boarding-house keeper must do. He has taken up a trade in which penny economies are ruin. Every judicious outlay which he makes will bring in large interest in the improved class and better paying qualities of his boarders. It is one of those cases, to use a homely proverb, where it is always wise to throw out herrings to catch whales.—N. Y. Tribune.

BE HAPPY NOW.

O ye tired mothers and daughters and occupants of the sitting-room generally, listen now and let me tell you a secret—a secret worth knowing. This taking no comfort as you go along, but forever looking forward to all the enjoyment does not pay. From what I know of it I would as soon chase butterflies for a living, or bottle moonshine for a cloudy night. The only true way to be happy is to take drops of happiness as God gives them to us every day of our lives. What is work but something to keep us out of mischief; and she who does too much of it, instead of keeping out of mischief, is playing the mischief with herself. How can a woman be at her best to entertain her husband, or to instruct or amuse her family, who makes a perpetual slave of herself, and keeps her poor tired body in a state of drudgery and physical weakness. Better let some things go undone than to so completely unfit one's self for all enjoyment at home. The great thing is to learn to make the most of one's self, and to be happy over our work. It is so the world over. The boy must learn to be happy while he is plodding over his lesson; the apprentice, while he is learning his trade; the merchant, while he is making his fortune. If he fails to learn this art he will be sure to get tired out and to miss his enjoyment when he gains what he has sighed for.

'No, sir-ee,' remarked the old resident. 'My wife didn't bring me a cent. But it was my fault. I wouldn't have it. The morning of the day we were married I says to her, says I: 'Maria, how much money have you got?' She says, 'John, I've got just twenty-five cents.' Then says I, 'Come with me,' and I took her down to the canal and had her throw that quarter into the drink. I wasn't goin' to have no woman twitting me about spreadin' around on her money.—Lowell Citizen.

'Pa, why do they call them high schools?' 'It's because we pay so much for 'em, my son. You'll understand those things better when you get to be a tax-payer.'

He (poetical): 'Why should I fear to sip the sweets of each red lip?' She (practically): 'No necessity for alarm at all. I use a vegetable color which is not poisonous.'

Better face a coming danger once than be always in fear.

Where pangs the mortal flesh assail,
And give a bitterness to life,
Making the cheek with anguish pale,
Amid the fierce internal strife;
Then Sanford's Ginger soothes the pain,
And smiling health looks up again. j

Impure water, unhealthy climate, unripe fruit unwholsome food, malaria, and a thousand little ills are nothing to those fortified by the use of Sanford's Ginger, "the delicious," j

FOUNDED BY GORDON M. FISK.

A BRAVE LADY.

SHE ENDURES THE PAIN OF A SEVERE SURGICAL OPERATION WITHOUT TAKING CHLOROFORM.

(From the Courier.)

Mrs. Schoonmaker, of Creek Locks, Ulster Co., New York, had the misfortune to entirely lose the sight of one of her eyes, through an accident, and endured painful inflammatory action therein for two long years; the other eye finally becoming sympathetically affected, her general health seriously suffering; indeed, she was a mere wreck, a walking skeleton. In this terrible strait she consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who told her at once that the injured eye must be removed. She quietly but firmly said, "All right Doctor, but don't give me chloroform. Let my husband sit by my side during the operation, and I will neither cry out nor stir." The work was done, and the poor woman kept her word. Talk of soldierly courage! This showed greater pluck than it takes to face a hundred guns. To restore her general health and give tone and strength to the system, Dr. Kennedy then gave the "Favorite Remedy," which cleansed the blood and imparted new life to the long suffering woman. She rapidly gained health and strength, and is now well. The "Favorite Remedy" is a priceless blessing to women. No family should be without it Your druggist has it. If not, send to Dr. Davi, Kennedy, Rondout, New York. 4w17

Pride.

'Tis a curious fact as ever was known
In human nature, but often shown
Alike in castle and cottage,
That pride like pigs of a certain breed.
Will manage to live and thrive on "feed"
As poor as a pauper's pottage!

Of all the notable things on earth,
The queerest one is pride of birth,
Among our "fierce democracy!"
A bridge across a hundred years,
Without a prop to save it from sneers—
Not even a couple of rotted peers—
A thing for laughter, flouts and jeers,
Is American aristocracy.

Depend upon it, my snobbish friend,
Your family thread you can't ascend,
Without good reason to apprehend
You may find it waxed, at the other end,
By some plebeian vocation!
Or worse than that, your boasted line
May end in a loop of stronger twine,
That plagued some worthy relation!

Because you can't flourish in wordly affairs,
Don't be haughty and put on airs,
With insolent pride of station!
Don't be proud and turn up your nose
At poorer people in plainer clothes,
But learn, for the sake of the mind's repose,
That wealth's a bubble that comes—and goes!
And that all proud flesh, wherever it grows,
Is subject to irritation.

—John G. Saxe.

A RED MITTEN.

It was the afternoon of a clear sharp January day of 1861, and the company numbered fully two hundred; there were men and women, boys and girls, flying and circling about, in masses, singly, by dozens and by twos and threes, over the frozen surface of the beautiful Silver lake in Rockdale, a suburb of the flourishing city of B—. New England is dotted with these small bodies of water, and it is astounding to recount what a surprising number bear the name of Silver. And so on Silver lake this goodly company was disporting itself with all the gayety and zest the keen bracing air and exhilarating sport combined to produce.

Among the crowd were many lads and lasses who imagined they were fond of skating and came to Silver lake for no other reason. It was singular, too, to note how much more gracefully the 'outward roll,' backward or forward can be accomplished by joining hands or being linked together by a walking stick. Those sticks in some instances proved no non-conductors to the sympathetic thrill that pervaded the magnets at either end.

The positive and negative conditions were fully realized in the case of brawny John Horton and rosy cheeked Abbie Latham, the daughter of the 'squire. She, with her plump comely figure, and fresh, handsome face, lit up by a pair of laughing blue eyes, could have led awkward John on or off skates, anywhere, with an apron string or a thread for a conductor. Not so with John. He could lead her nowhere; and the more the girl could balk and tantalize him, the more she seemed to enjoy the skating and his company. Many a ludicrous figure he cut, and many an awkward fall he endured by her sudden and unaccountable turns and shiftings, and her mirth and glee were at the highest at John's repeated failures to follow her difficult and tortuous windings. John was overgrown and massive, his twenty years of existence not having yet served to properly knit together and round out the proportions of his frame. She was lithe and quick, and as graceful as she was skillful in the use of skates.

Apart from the throng, this afternoon, John espied a little red mitten lying on the ice, where it had been dropped by some one of the numerous children. Miss Abbie saw it, too, and as John, by one of his graceful movements, essayed to stoop and capture the article, she refused to release his hand; but, just as he bent forward she gave a wicked pull, and John, unbalanced, was sent sprawling a rod or two beyond. A peal of silvery laughter was her sympathetic comment, as with a graceful curve she turned and caught the tiny thing in her hand.

John blushed at his awkwardness, and held out his hand for the mitten.

But the captor only held it before him and gently moved away.

'Won't you give it to me?' he asked, 'I will find the owner.'

'I can find the owner more easily than you. I can't trust you, you would fall and crush the poor thing in trying to deliver it.' And she laughed again.

'You made me fall,' said John in a grieved tone. 'You are always doing these things. If I skated more and studied less I'd soon be as much an adept as your friend, Joe Staples, whom you are always praising.'

'You! Ha, ha, ha! As graceful as Joe Staples?' and the hilarity of the young maiden made John Horton's sluggish blood course through his veins till his face was as red as the scarlet kerchief that encircled his neck.

All the rest of that afternoon John was very gloomy and silent. He moved around mechanically, or rather, automatically, and his companion concluded to serve no more tricks upon him.

The sport finished, the two wended their way to the house of Mr. Latham, John's fair companion failing to rally him into any thing like conversation. He answered her only in monosyllables and seemed morose and preoccupied.

As he was about to take his leave, John said seriously and a little sarcastically, 'Abbie, I'm going back to college to-morrow and I hope you will enjoy the rest of the skating season in companionship more graceful than mine.'

'I hope I shall,' replied she in the same tone. 'You must feel bad about something; perhaps it is the mitten; you had better take it, no, not now—I won't give it up. If I ever think enough of you to surrender it, I'll send it to you by express.'

And then she smiled on John with rare sweetness, but John had seen that smile before, and felt she was only mocking him. So with a solemn good-night he buttoned his coat close up to his chin and with his hands resolutely thrust into his pockets, turned homeward, resolved to waste no more time with skating girls, who judge young men by the dexterity they exhibited in handling their heels.

II.

Among the earliest volunteer regiments that left for the seat of war in the summer of 1861 was the —th Massachusetts, with Lieut. John Horton as an officer of Co. B. Like hundreds of others he abandoned his books for the sword, and had passed nights and days in study and drill, to fit himself for his new position. Horton enjoyed the reputation among his fellows of being rather an anchorite. He was reticent, sometimes gloomy, and although he performed his duties acceptably, he had thus far failed to show any distinguishing qualities for a military career. He joined in few of the camp pleasures, and when he was not on duty, reading or studying, was sure to be seen in abstract thought, walking about the streets of the camp, or in the region of country immediately around. Christmas and New Year in camp formed one of the brightest seasons to the hard-worked soldier in the years of the Rebellion. Though the quantity of useful and useless articles dispatched from home was at all times great, the bulk of contributions arriving in camp at this festive season sorely tried the carrying capacity of all engaged in supplying the army at the front. And the occasions of opening the boxes and bundles among both officers and privates were most interesting and exciting. The officers of the —th had arranged to have an 'opening,' in the colonel's quarters, and thither all who were not on duty repaired. The evening was of course most enjoyable, for nearly every one had received from home a gift or token to remind him of a mother, sister or sweetheart, sometimes of all three. Horton was present, cool, gloomy and indifferent. He did not expect any present. His family was scattered, and many of those nearest to him to whose loving sympathy he would naturally turn at this time had passed away. He did not feel in a sentimental or sympathetic mood, and yet no particle of envy entered his mind in witnessing the enjoyment of others. As the major held up a small paper box, however, and called out 'Lieutenant John W. Horton,' the latter started and felt his face aglow in an instant. He took the parcel and in spite of entreaties, in which not a few jokes were cracked at his expense, placed it in his pocket till the conclusion of the festivities, when he retired to the comfortable quarters he shared with Lieutenant Carter.

Lieut. Horton was puzzled and curious. After divesting himself of his overcoat, he sat down, placed the box on the table, and in company with his companion lighted the solacing dudeen, determined to approach and unravel the mystery as became a philosopher. Carter got decidedly impatient before even the outer wrappings were removed, as Horton conducted proceedings with weighty deliberation. At last Horton shook from the box a little red mitten snugly wrapped in a piece of white tissue paper. No note of explanation appeared, and Horton met his companion's gaze with a look in which were pictured at least half a dozen of the emotions that affect the human mind, the principal one being surprise.

III.

For the next three evenings our hero was engaged in writing letters—or rather a letter—for no sooner was each one completed than it was torn in pieces and burned. Horton felt himself in a tight fix, and hoped the enemy would make a demonstration on the camp that he might get out of it. He had rather face a hundred cannon than undertake to acknowledge the reception of that mitten. He knew he had loved Miss Latham, but his big, sensitive soul had been terribly lacerated by her apparently heartless behavior, and he had concluded to become indifferent, not only to her but to all womankind. This might be another of her heartless tricks, but when Jack recalled her words, "If I ever think enough of you to surrender it I'll send it to you," he felt the little witch did entertain some regard for him. Still, as she had vouchsafed no kind message with the surrender of the mitten, he was at a loss how to act. Write he could not. 'If I asked Carter's advice,' he reasoned, 'he would laugh at me. Why can't these plaguey women let a fellow alone anyway?' he muttered to himself. 'I was trying to forget her—and now she has opened all my wounds afresh. She did it to tantalize me, but I'll show the flirt and the whole sex that I can't be tantalized.' And then Jack took from his inner pocket an envelope, out of which he fished a little red object, on which he gazed for a few moments as a naturalist might gaze upon a newly-discovered insect, with mingled curiosity and tenderness. The soldier sighed as he replaced the trifle, and going to the door of his tent gazed out into the darkness.

The evening was mild and calm, and the darkness almost impenetrable. Scarcely a sound disturbed the sleeping camps, and as the enemy across the Potomac were believed to intend no hostile demonstration, the utmost precaution had not been taken to guard against surprise. As Jack stood gazing into the darkness, a succession of flashes lit up the gloom, and the sharp report of small arms broke the stillness. 'Hello! here's for fun?' exclaimed Jack, as he rushed for his accoutrements. The long roll called the men into line, and in a few moments the regiment was prepared to receive the enemy. Being one of the officers at hand, Lieut. Horton was ordered by the colonel to go forward with a detail of men, and ascertain the true state of affairs. Our pickets were retreating, the firing being answered by stray shots from the enemy; no judgment of their numbers could be formed, but our panic-stricken pickets reported them to be ten thousand strong, at least. Horton determined to keep cool and ascertain for himself the number of the enemy. He had had little experience of fighting as yet, and his position was by no means a pleasant one. In this manœuver his excellent judgment was proved, for after studying the situation as long as it was prudent, he hastened to the colonel and informed him that the force consisted of not more than a regiment of infantry, moving directly for the camp.

A hot skirmish ensued, the fight lasting for an hour or two. The demonstration closed with the retreat of the enemy, on whose heels Lieut. Horton, whose fighting blood was up, hung with a tenacity that astonished his brother officers. Jack braved danger with a coolness that was amazing, and directed the fire of his men where it would do the most good. It was his ambition to capture somebody or something, and he did, a Confederate captain and two privates who were 'surrounded' by himself and one of his soldiers. But Jack, fired by his success, rashly pressed ahead for more human plunder, when he was laid low by a bullet through the shoulder.

IV.

Jack Horton was the hero of that flight, and was mentioned in the commander's report for his coolness, correct judgment and unflinching bravery. It needed just such an occasion as this to bring out what was in the man, but Jack was modest and didn't presume he had done more than he ought. His wound was a painful one, and in a few days he was on his way to Rockdale, where the reports of his achievements had preceded him. Jack couldn't help feeling a little curious about how Miss Abbie would greet him if he happened to meet her. He hadn't the remotest idea of calling on her, however. His time was his country's, and all his leisure moments were passed, even in those invalid days, in the study of military tactics. He did not want to be made a lion of; did not pretend to resemble that noble animal in the least. So he stayed at home and studied his books.

Just before his return to the army he attended a fair at Rockdale in aid of the soldiers. The young ladies were the principal attractions at this, as at all fairs; and among the young ladies none were more attractive than Miss Abbie Latham. She drove a remarkably successful business at the flower stand, one of her principal patrons being Mr. Joseph Staples, who purchased at least half her stock, and distributed it with a lavish hand. He had not gone to war, but had at least, and without compulsion, hired a substitute. His patriotism was ardent, as he assured Miss Abbie, but there were other attractions nearer home.

Certainly Lieut. Horton could but pay his respects to Miss Abbie. His face was paler and his form had become more trim and manly than when she last saw him. His features, Abbie noticed, bore an expression of sadness and suffering; he moved without awkwardness, and all the young ladies declared him to be the handsomest soldier in the hall. He won the sword that was voted for on this occasion, as he deserved to. Jack's heart throbbed a little as he met the gaze of the young lady; but if he felt any emotion it must have been slight; she was very busy with her customers, and especially with her wholesale customer, Mr. Staples, yet as the Lieutenant bade her good evening and turned away, he saw her eyes drop and a faint flush steal over her cheek. For two old friends so long separated, the meeting was decidedly cold and formal, and Jack was chilled to the marrow.

V.

In the stirring events of the next two years, Horton bore his full share—at Fredericksburg, Chancellorville, Antietam, Gettysburg, the wilderness, down to Cold Harbor, where at the head of his regiment he fell desperately wounded in the terrible and unsuccessful assault on that stronghold.

He was conveyed to the hospital at Washington in a seemingly hopeless condition, with several wounds, each of which was dangerous. The nurses moved among the wounded men like angels of mercy. Some of the soldiers lay in a stupor, some were raving in delirium, and others dying in agony. For days Horton's life hung on a thread, his fevered brain mercifully rendering him unconscious of suffering. As he awoke one morning a soft and gentle hand was soothing his brow, when the dampness indicated that the fever was broken. He tried to open his eyes but was too weak; speak he could not; and many hours passed before he could discern what was around him. Since the night of the Cold Harbor fight his life had been a blank. He remembered nothing. And now he saw before him the physician, and the nurse with a sweet pale face, that looked familiar, but he could not recall the name of its owner. Again trying to speak, the surgeon kindly whispered, 'Keep perfectly quiet and all will be well,' and the female attendant, at his motion, withdrew.

The next morning his dim vision discerned the pale and anxious face, and a gleam of wondering inquiry passed over his countenance as he gazed upon her. At last he feebly whispered: 'Where am I?'

'In the hospital and with friends,' she gently answered.

He would have spoken more but she withdrew. The next day he was stronger, and he asked, 'Where have I seen you?' At a sign from the physician the nurse answered:

'At your old home. Don't you know me? I'm Abbie Latham. You are getting better now, and will soon be well."

Jack was strong enough to begin to collect his thoughts, which were, of course, at once concentrated on his nurse. He improved wonderfully under her care, and one bright morning occurred the last conversation we shall record in this romantic sketch.

Miss Latham was sitting by the side of his cot, arranging a bouquet. The wounded man had begun to feel like his old self, and permission was given him to converse all he desired.

'How long have you been in the hospital, Abbie?'

'More than a year,' she replied, in a sweet, womanly voice.

Jack thought he had never beheld a fairer creature. If she was beautiful as a girl, the scenes she had witnessed had touched and chastened all that was lovable in her nature. She was no longer a girl—she was a tender woman.

'You have saved my life,' said Jack, his eyes filling with tears.

'No, no. Your strength has triumphed. I have done what little I could. Oh, you were so terribly hurt!' And here her eyes filled, and her bosom heaved as she took his hand and gently pushed the brown locks away from his forehead.

Jack had never felt so happy before in his life, despite the solemn character of the conversation.

'I can never repay you, Abbie, I'm only sorry for that. But if I dared hope—'

'Perhaps you can, Jack,' she replied, with the sweetest and most confiding smile. 'I found something in your inner vest pocket which has paid me already.' And she took from a blood-stained envelope the little red mitten.
